CRIMINAL PROCEDURE

PART VI : PROCEEDINGS IN PROSECUTIONS — (contd.)

CHAPTER XVI.

OF COMPLAINTS TO MAGISTRATES — (contd.)

201.* (1) If the complaint has been made in writing to a Magistrate who is not competent to take cognizance of the case, he shall return the complaint for presentation to the proper Court with an endorsement to that effect.

Section 201

Procedure by Magistrate not competent to take cognizance of the case.

(2) If the complaint has not been made in writing, such Magistrate shall direct the complainant to the proper Court.

Synopsis

1. Legislative changes.
2. Scope of the section.
3. Magistrate not competent to take cognizance.
4. "Shall return."
5. Oral complaints.

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced in 1872 —

There was no section in the Code of 1861 corresponding to this section. The provision contained in sub-s.(1) of this section was newly inserted as S. 145 in the Code of 1872.

* Code of 1882 : S. 201 — Same as sub-section (1).

Code of 1872 : S. 145.

Procedure by Magistrate not empowered to hear complaint.

145. If the Magistrate be not competent to receive the complaint, he shall refer the complainant to a Magistrate having jurisdiction.

Code of 1861 — Nil.

Notes 1-3

Changes introduced in 1882 —

Section 145 of the Code of 1872 applied to all complaints oral as well as written. Section 201 of the Code of 1882 limited the section to complaints made in writing.

Changes introduced in 1898 —

Sub-section (2) has been newly added to the Code of 1898.

2. Scope of the section. — A Magistrate, when he receives a complaint under S. 190, is either competent to take cognizance of the case or he is not. This section deals with the procedure to be adopted where he is not competent to take cognizance of the case.

As to the procedure to be adopted in cases where the Magistrate is competent to take cognizance of the case but finds, during the course of the enquiry or trial, that he is not competent to inquire or try further, see Ss. 346, 347, 348 and chapter XXXII of the Code.

This section refers back to S. 190 and to Part A of chapter 15 and contemplates incompetency to take cognizance and not incompetency to hear or try. It does not bar a Magistrate not competent to take cognizance of the complaint from hearing the case if sent to him for hearing by a Court competent to do so under S. 192 or S. 528.¹

3. Magistrate not competent to take cognizance. — As to what Magistrates are competent to take cognizance of offences, see S. 190 and Notes thereto. It has been held that a Magistrate who has no local jurisdiction to inquire into or try an offence cannot take cognizance of it.¹

The question of jurisdiction must be decided at the outset by a perusal of the complaint. It is on the terms of the complaint that the Magistrate first has to inform himself as to the nature of the case and see whether, from the allegations made in the complaint, he has jurisdiction to entertain it.² This question the Magistrate himself must decide and should not seek or act on the advice of any other District or superior Magistrate.³

A Magistrate cannot refuse to take cognizance of a case, on any of the following grounds —

- (1) that though he is entitled to take cognizance of the charges named in the complaint, he is not entitled to take cognizance of a charge not named in the complaint but which could be made out from the allegations in the complaint;⁴
- (2) that the offence merits greater punishment than he is empowered to inflict;⁵

4. "Shall return." — Where a Magistrate finds that he is not competent to take cognizance of a case on a complaint made in writing to him, he shall return the complaint to be presented to the proper Court having jurisdiction, with an endorsement to that effect.¹ He need not and should not examine the complainant in such a case.²

Where a Magistrate, who had jurisdiction in two capacities, as the Headquarters Magistrate and Railway Magistrate, subordinate in each capacity to a different High Court, received a complaint in one capacity and transferred it to his own file in the other capacity, it was held that he must be deemed to have returned the same under this section to be presented to the proper Court, and to have accepted it as re-presented.³

5. Oral complaints. — Sub-section (2), which has been newly added in 1893, contemplates the presentation of oral complaints also.¹ See also S. 4 (1) (h).

In the case of oral complaints, the Magistrate should direct the complainant to the proper Court. See also Note 1.

202. If the Chief Presidency Magistrate, or any other Presidency Magistrate whom the Local Government may from time to time authorize in this behalf, or any Magistrate of the first or second class, sees reason to distrust the truth of a complaint of an offence of which he is authorized to take cognizance, he may, when the complainant has been examined, record his reasons for distrusting the truth of the complaint, and may then postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the person complained against, and either inquire into the case himself or direct a previous local investigation to be made by an officer subordinate to such Magistrate, or by a police-officer, or by such other person, not being a Magistrate or police-officer, as he thinks fit for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint.

If such investigation is made by some person not being a Magistrate or a police-officer, he shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Code on an officer in charge of a police-station, except that he shall not have power to arrest without warrant.

If such inquiry or investigation is made by means of some person other than an officer exercising any of the powers of a Magistrate or a police-officer, such person shall exercise all the powers conferred by this Act on an officer in charge of a police-station, except that he shall have no power to make an arrest.

Code of 1861 : S. 180.

180. If the Magistrate sees cause to distrust the truth of the complaint, he may postpone the issuing of process for causing the attendance of the person complained against, and direct a previous enquiry to be made into the truth of the complaint, either by means of any officer subordinate to such Magistrate or of a local police-officer, or in such other mode as he shall judge most proper, for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. 1. Legislative history.

Changes made in 1869 —

Under S. 180 of the Code of 1861, this provision was limited to cases triable by a Court of Session only.¹ Act VIII of 1869 extended it to all cases.²

Changes made in the Code of 1872 —

Under the Code of 1861, a Magistrate could direct an inquiry only; while under the Code of 1872 he could also direct an investigation.

Changes made in the Code of 1882 —

Section 202 of the Code of 1882 introduced many important changes:

- (1) The word "Magistrate," which was general, was limited to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Magistrate of the first or second class, and any other Presidency Magistrate specially authorized.

Section 202
Note 1

- (2) The words "of an offence of which he is authorised to take cognizance" were added after the word complaint in order to restrict the scope of the word complaint to complaints of offences.
- (3) The words "when the complainant has been examined" were newly added.
- (4) The words "record his reasons for distrusting the truth of the complaint" were newly added and as a consequential change, the words "sees cause to distrust" were changed into "sees reason to distrust."
- (5) The words "and either inquire into the case himself or" were newly added.
- (6) The words "direct a previous inquiry or investigation" were omitted and the words "direct a previous local investigation" were substituted, thus taking away the power of inquiry except by himself. As a consequential change, the words "inquiry or" were omitted in para. 2 also.
- (7) The words "or by such other person not being a Magistrate or police-officer" were substituted for the words "or in such other mode."
- (8) The third paragraph, which ran as "This section applies to the police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay" was newly added.

Changes introduced in 1898 —

There was only one important change introduced in the Code in 1898. The words "is not satisfied as to" were substituted for the words "sees reason to distrust."

Changes made in 1923 —

The Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923, substituted sub-sections (1) & (2) making the following important changes:

- (1) The words "any Magistrate" were substituted for the words "The Chief Presidency Magistrate . . . first or second class."
- (2) The words "or which has been transferred to him under section 192" are new.
- (3) The words "if he thinks fit" have been substituted for the words "if the Magistrate is not satisfied as to the truth of the complaint" in order to widen the scope of the section.
- (4) The words "inquiry or investigation" have been re-inserted for the words "previous local investigation." This change also is made in para. 2, as a consequence.
- (5) The words "any Magistrate subordinate to him" have been substituted for the words "any officer subordinate to such Magistrate."
- (6) The words "when the complainant has been examined" were omitted and a proviso was added as follows:
"Provided that no such direction shall be made (a) unless the complainant has been examined on oath under the provisions of S. 200, or (b) where the complaint has been made by a Court under the provisions of this Code."
- (7) Sub-section (2A) was newly added.

Changes made in 1926 —

By the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, II of 1926, the proviso of 1923 was altered into the present proviso.

2. Scope and object of the section. — Under this section a Magistrate, who has taken cognizance of an offence, or to whom a case has been transferred under S.192, may postpone the issue of process to the accused person in order to ascertain the truth or falsity of the complaint. This he can do, either by inquiring into it himself, or by directing an inquiry or investigation by a Magistrate subordinate to him or by any police-officer or any other person.

The scope of chapter XVI of the Code, which contains this section, is to separate unfounded from substantial cases even at the outset¹ and as such, the object of an inquiry or investigation under this section is to ensure that no person shall be compelled to answer a criminal charge unless the Court is satisfied that there is a prima facie case for proceeding and issuing a process against the accused person.² Such an inquiry or investigation is designed to afford the Court an opportunity of either confirming or removing any hesitation it may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the inquiry varies with the circumstances of each case and it is certainly not contemplated that it should be exhaustive. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and depth of the inquiry is entirely in the discretion of the Magistrate. The provision is enabling and not obligatory. As soon as the Magistrate has satisfied himself that process should issue, its object is fulfilled.³ The inquiry is not intended to supersede a regular trial.⁴

It is not necessary that a Magistrate should call for an inquiry under this section in every case. It is only when he thinks fit, that he may do so.⁵ But it is generally advisable that an inquiry be held where the complainant is not speaking from his own knowledge.⁶

Where, however, such an inquiry is made obligatory as under S. 10 of the Child Marriage Restraint Act of 1929, the failure to do so vitiates the whole trial.⁷

A Magistrate acting under this section can only consider the report of any inquiry or investigation directed by him⁸ and not any report made previously and not directed by him⁹ or an inquest report made by another Magistrate under S. 176¹⁰ or any previous departmental inquiry.¹¹ The purpose of the inquiry under this section being only to decide whether to issue process to the accused or not, it is not competent for the Magistrate to treat the evidence recorded in such an inquiry as evidence in the case and forthwith put the accused on his defence and convict him.¹²

3. "Any Magistrate."—The section, as it stood before the amendment of 1923, permitted only the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Presidency Magistrates authorized in this behalf by the Local Government and any Magistrate of the first and second class only to act under this section. But now the use of the words 'any Magistrate' removes the restrictions on third class Magistrates and Presidency Magistrates. Now any Magistrate authorized to take cognizance of a complaint, or to whom a case is transferred under S. 192, can act under this section.

4. Presidency Magistrates.—Before the amendment of 1923, a Presidency Magistrate (other than the Chief Presidency Magistrate) not empowered by the Local Government could not direct a local investigation under this section.¹ In Madras, the Local Government had invested all Presidency Magistrates with such power. Now, no such special vesting of power is necessary.

Where Presidency Magistrates have been declared by the Provincial Government, under S. 21, sub-s.(2), to be subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate can, by virtue of S. 18, sub-s.(4), make over a complaint to an ordinary Presidency Magistrate for inquiry and report under this section.²

5. Complaint of an offence.—The section, by its terms, applies only to cases where a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence on complaint under S. 190 (1) (a) and not otherwise.¹

Therefore, a Magistrate cannot direct an inquiry or investigation under this section in the following cases —

- (1) Cases, in which he takes cognizance of the offence on a police-report under S. 190 (1) (b)² or on information under S. 190 (1) (c).³
- (2) Petition under S. 107, which is not a complaint of an offence at all.⁴
A Magistrate has, however, in this case, the right to call for a report from the police, apart from the provisions of this section.⁵

- (4) Complaint under S. 552 for restoration of abducted females, which is not a complaint of an offence.⁷

Complaint by Court or public servant. — Where the complaint is by a Court, it was formerly held that the Magistrate had no power to act under this section because there was already an inquiry and the accused was sent in custody under S. 476 and there was no issue of process to be postponed.¹ Clause (b) of the proviso added by the amendment of 1923 also specifically made action under this section unnecessary. This was found to cause many difficulties; also, cases might arise in which an inquiry or investigation should be made before a person is put on trial. Therefore the Legislature again, by Act II of 1926, amended the proviso under which now an inquiry or investigation may be directed even in the case of a complaint by a Court under S. 476.

As regards a complaint by a public servant, the section does not make any difference. The Magistrate has just as much right to investigate preliminarily under this section, whether the complaint is filed by a public servant or by anyone else.²

7. "Authorised to take cognizance." — A Magistrate cannot act under this section unless he has authority to take cognizance of the offence mentioned in the complaint. Thus, a Magistrate cannot take cognizance of an offence mentioned in S. 197 without the previous sanction of the Provincial Government and where he receives a complaint without such sanction, he cannot send the case to a subordinate Magistrate for inquiry under this section.¹

8. "Transferred to him under S. 192." — These words are new and were added by the amending Act XVIII of 1923 "to cover cases which have been transferred to a Magistrate under S. 192, as well as cases of which he has taken cognizance himself."¹ Before this amendment, it was held that a Magistrate, to whom a case had been transferred for disposal, had no jurisdiction to direct an inquiry or investigation under this section.² Now this is no longer law and a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S. 192 can act under this section. But a transfer under S. 528 does not come within the ambit of this section and a Magistrate to whom a case is transferred under S. 528 cannot order an inquiry under this section.³

When a Magistrate has examined witnesses under S. 202 and, believing them, transferred the case for trial to another Magistrate, the latter has been held to have no power to examine those witnesses again under S. 202 and then proceed to dismiss the complaint under section 203.⁴

9. "May, if he thinks fit." — Under the Codes of 1872 and 1882, it was held that a Magistrate could not act under this section without discrimination¹ and unless he "sees cause or reason to distrust the truth of the complaint."² The Code of 1893 gave a little more latitude to the Magistrate's discretion and a Magistrate could act under this section, if he was "not satisfied as to the truth of a complaint."³ Even these words were considered too narrow and by the amendment of 1923 the Magistrate can now act under this section on any ground "he thinks fit." It is, thus, entirely within the discretion of the Magistrate whether or not an inquiry or investigation under this section should be ordered.⁴ A complainant has no right to require his complaint to be forwarded to the police⁵ or to another Magistrate for investigation or inquiry.

11. "Postpone the issue of process." — An order under this section is one by virtue of which the Magistrate decides to postpone the issue of process for compelling the attendance of the accused person, where, for any reason that he thinks fit, he wishes to hold an inquiry or direct an inquiry or investigation into the complaint. He can do this, therefore, only before process is issued. Hence, a Magistrate, who, after issue of process,¹ or when the accused is brought under a warrant² or after taking evidence,³ holds an inquiry or directs an inquiry or investigation, acts in contravention of the section. After the issue of process he must proceed with the trial. This rule applies equally to the successor of a Magistrate who has issued the process⁴ as also to a Magistrate to whom the case is transferred after issue of process.⁵

Where a complaint is made against several persons jointly, the fact that the Magistrate has issued processes against some of them will not deprive him of his power to postpone the issue of process against the others and to make a preliminary inquiry in respect of the offences alleged against them.⁶

Under certain circumstances, however, a Magistrate may properly direct an inquiry under this section even after the issue of process. Where, after the Magistrate has issued processes against two accused, if one of them lays a cross-complaint, the Magistrate can properly rescind the order to issue process and send the cases to a subordinate Magistrate for inquiry and report.⁷

It has been held that where the Magistrate has before him two complaints connected with the same subject-matter, he has a discretion to postpone the issue of process in one case pending the result of the other case.⁸

When once the Magistrate postpones the issue of process under this section, he is required to inquire into the case himself or to direct an inquiry or investigation. The fact that there was already a police investigation does not affect his proceedings.⁹ Similarly, where the

12. Position of the accused. — A person complained against does not become an accused until it has been decided to issue process against him, and he is not entitled to be represented by a pleader during the preliminary inquiry which may be held under this section.¹ If he chooses to attend the proceedings, he may, of course, do so like any other member of the public but he has no locus standi as a party, the purpose of the law being clearly to exclude him until sufficient ground for proceeding against him has been made out by the complainant.^{1a}

Proceedings under this section are not proceedings inter partes but they are instituted and conducted by the Magistrate in order that he may be able to satisfy himself whether there is or is not, any ground for issuing process and it is not until process is issued that the matter becomes a case.² Therefore, the practice of issuing a notice to the accused before the issue of process³ or of conducting the inquiry in his presence⁴ or of hearing arguments on behalf of the accused⁵ or of

13. May inquire into the case himself or direct an inquiry or investigation. — Under this section, as it stood before the amendment in 1923, a Magistrate had himself to conduct the inquiry and could not direct an inquiry to be made by any subordinate Magistrate or a police-officer or other person. These persons could only hold a local investigation.¹ But in Amrit Majhi v. Emperor,² a doubt was raised whether the language of the section did not seem consistent with the long existing practice of referring complaints to subordinate Magistrates for inquiry and report. expressly empowers a Magistrate to direct an inquiry under this section by a Magistrate subordinate to him or an investigation by a police-officer or such other person as he thinks fit, thus expressly adopting the view held in Amrit Majhi's case.³ A third class Magistrate, however, even under the amended section, must inquire into the case himself and has no power to direct any inquiry or investigation.

Notes 13-14.

Under this section, a Magistrate has to choose one of the two alternatives, namely, either to inquire into the case himself or direct an inquiry or investigation. He cannot have recourse to both. Where, therefore, a Magistrate chose to inquire into the case himself, it was held that he could not direct a local investigation.⁴ Similarly, where he has ordered an investigation by another person, he cannot follow it up by an inquiry himself.⁵ But it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that a Magistrate, if he is dissatisfied with the result of an investigation directed by him, may hold an inquiry himself.⁶

An inquiry under the section can be directed only to a subordinate Magistrate and not to a superior Magistrate⁷ or a Magistrate of the same class.⁸

The subordinate Magistrate directed to inquire need not be competent to entertain the complaint he is asked to inquire into, provided the Magistrate, who directs the inquiry, is competent to entertain and dispose of the same.⁹

Once a Magistrate has directed an inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate under this section, he cannot recall the proceedings before the inquiry is completed.¹⁰ But it has been held that he can stay the proceedings.¹¹

It has been held that where a Magistrate has directed an inquiry or investigation by another under this section, he cannot, on receipt of the report of such inquiry or investigation, transfer the case for disposal to another Magistrate without deciding whether the case should be dismissed under S. 203 or proceeded with under S. 204.¹²

14. "Inquiry."—The inquiry contemplated by this section does not necessarily mean an inquiry by examining witnesses, or by holding an investigation into the case or in any particular form. The Magistrate can do it in any way he thinks proper.¹ He is at perfect liberty to look into the police records and if he is satisfied that the complaint is groundless, he can dismiss the complaint.² But where he examines witnesses in such an inquiry, and evidence which is opposed to the complainant's allegations is brought before him, he should give an opportunity to the complainant to explain or to meet such evidence.³ It is in the discretion of the Magistrate to allow the complainant to be represented by a vakil or not in such an inquiry.⁴ Proceedings in an inquiry under this section should not be dilatory and protracted.⁵

15. Evidence in the inquiry — Sub-s. (2A).— The evidence, in an inquiry held under this section, need not be confined to the examination of the complainant alone. The section leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate to examine such witnesses and make such inquiries as he thinks fit.¹ There is nothing to prohibit him from examining witnesses, whom he knows to be able to throw light on the matter, or from importing even his own personal knowledge into it.² The Magistrate is also entitled to thoroughly cross-examine the witnesses in order to get at the truth.^{2a}

Where a Magistrate inquiring into a case under this section examines witnesses, he may, under sub-s. (2A), if he thinks fit, take the evidence of such witnesses on oath. This provision was added by the amending Act of 1923 to put an end to the long-existing conflict of views as to whether such an inquiry is a judicial proceeding within the meaning of S. 476 so as to make the complainant liable to prosecution for making a false complaint or for perjury. The Calcutta³ and Patna⁴ High Courts held that such an inquiry was a judicial proceeding, while the Madras High Court held that it was not.⁵ The Lahore High Court doubted if it was a judicial proceeding.⁶ The present sub-s. (2A) gives effect to the Calcutta and Patna view and the Madras view is no longer correct. An inquiry under this section therefore is now a judicial proceeding.⁷

16. Magistrate holding inquiry, if disqualified from trying. — There is nothing in the Code which disqualifies a Magistrate, who holds a preliminary inquiry under this section, from trying the case himself when there is nothing to indicate that he initiated or directed the proceedings or took any personal interest in the matter of the complaint presented before him.¹ The fact that a subordinate Magistrate expressed his opinion in submitting a report, in a case referred to him under this section, is no bar to his holding the trial on an order by the District Magistrate making over the case to him for the purpose.² See S. 556 Note 19.

17. Investigation. — A Magistrate may, if he thinks fit, direct an investigation by a police-officer or by any other person for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsehood of the complaint. Before the amendment of 1923, the Magistrate could direct a local investigation even by a subordinate Magistrate.

The words "local investigation" were not restricted to the investigation of the physical features only but meant an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the complaint. The word 'local' was used with a view to hold the investigation in the locality for the convenience of the parties but the investigation was not confined to the investigation of the locality itself.¹ This is also evident from the definition of the term in S. 4 (1) (l) of the Code where the investigation by way of collection of evidence is to be conducted by a police-officer or by any person other than a Magistrate. A local investigation, therefore, is merely a proceeding for the collection of evidence on the spot for the purpose of ascertaining if the complaint is true or false.² It can be ordered when there is a quarrel about boundaries or any matter of that kind.³

The word 'local' has been deleted by the amendment in 1923 indicating clearly that the investigation is not confined to mere inspection of the locality.

18. "Investigation by police."

- (1) Trivial and non-cognizable cases. — It is not advisable for Magistrates to make indiscriminate use of police agency for the purpose of ascertaining matters as to which they are bound to form their own opinion.¹ This is specially so in cases regarding offences not cognizable by the police.^{1a} Similarly, in trivial cases, except for special reasons, one or the other of the modes of inquiry permitted by the section should be adopted² as it is an abuse of the powers given by this section to refer such petty cases (e. g., an assault of a petty character) to the police for inquiry, the proper course for Magistrates in such cases being to take action on the complaint at once.³
- (2) Cognizable cases. — A police investigation under this section is different from the investigation referred to in S. 156. A Magistrate in cognizable cases, after he has taken cognizance of an offence under S. 190 (1) (a) (e. g., on complaint) can only order an investigation and report under this section, but cannot order an inquiry under S. 156, and direct the police to submit a charge-sheet. That means a Magistrate cannot proceed under chapter XIV after acting under chapter XVI.⁴ When a complaint is referred under this section by the Magistrate for investigation, the police need do no more than make a report.⁵ But this does not debar them from exercising their ordinary powers of arrest and investigation and from sending up the accused for trial under a charge-sheet.⁶ The Bombay High Court⁷ and the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court⁸ have, however, held that where an investigation by the police has been ordered under this section, the police have no power to send up the accused for trial under a charge-sheet.

- (3) Where the accused is a police-officer. — If the accused is himself a police-officer, it is not proper nor is it contemplated that the Magistrate should call for a report from the police-officer, who is himself the accused⁹ or from a superior or other police-officer.¹⁰ In such cases the Magistrate himself should hold the inquiry¹¹ or direct a local inquiry by a subordinate Magistrate.¹² Complaints against police-officers should be handled with the greatest care. In such cases, the complainant should be given every facility to prove his allegations.¹³

It is not desirable that a complaint against a person who is alleged to have acted in collusion with the police should be handed over to the police for investigation.¹⁴ It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case¹⁵ that it is not illegal to send a complaint, in which the bona fides of the police are impugned, for inquiry or investigation by a police-officer.

- (4) Report. — The report called for under this section should form part of the record and as such a copy thereof can be given to the accused.¹⁶ The report should be submitted to the same Magistrate who had ordered the investigation and not to another Magistrate.¹⁷ Such a report is absolutely privileged.¹⁸

19. "Such other person." — The Magistrate may direct an investigation by such other person as he thinks fit. 'Such other person' under this section includes a panchayat within the meaning of the U. P. Village Panchayat Act.¹ A master is not a fit person to be directed to investigate and make a report in a case of complaint against his servant.²

It is illegal for a Magistrate to call upon the accused himself to make a report and act upon it.³

20. Examination of the complainant — Proviso. — The proviso to sub-s. (1) makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to examine the complainant on oath, before directing an inquiry or investigation under this section, save in the case where the complaint is by a Court. Under this section, before it was amended in 1923, such an examination was a pre-requisite, whether the Magistrate intended to make a personal inquiry himself or whether he intended to give a direction for an inquiry or investigation. The present proviso requires such examination to be made only where a direction for inquiry is to be made and not where the Magistrate intends to make a personal inquiry himself.

A complaint, therefore, cannot be sent for inquiry or investigation unless the complainant has been examined on oath;¹ and if any report of such an enquiry or investigation is called for without such 21. Powers of the inquiring or investigating officer.

- (1) A Magistrate inquiring into a case can exercise all the powers of a Magistrate, including the power of taking evidence of witnesses on oath. But he has not the powers of a police-officer to keep an accused in custody for the purpose of an inquiry.¹
- (2) A police-officer making an investigation under this section has all the powers conferred on him under chapter XIV. He can make a full inquiry from the complainant and his witnesses and the defendant and his witnesses.²
- (3) Any other person directed to make an investigation has all the powers of an officer-in-charge of the police-station except the power of arrest without warrant,³ i. e., the powers conferred under ss. 55, 56, 94, 127, 128, 153, 156 and 157; the power to arrest without warrant remains with the Magistrate and a police-officer.⁴

23. Revision. — When a Magistrate does not act as he should under this section, the aggrieved party is entitled to apply in revision and the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere if necessary in the interests of justice.¹ If any irregularity in procedure under this section has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice, the High Court will not make any order in revision, which can result only in harassment to the parties and the waste of public time.² The following are instances of such irregularities where the High Court will not interfere unless there is a failure of justice —

1. Scope of the section. — This section gives large powers to a Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without issuing a process.¹ It does not apply where process has been issued: the proceedings in such cases fall under the next chapter.² Nor does it apply where the proceeding is not one which is initiated on a complaint,^{2a} e. g., proceeding under S. 107,³ S. 552⁴ or S. 145⁵ of the Code.

Notes 1-2

The materials on which the Magistrate is to act are expressly limited by the section to —

- (1) the statement on oath (if any) of the complainant, and
- (2) the result of any investigation or inquiry under S. 202;⁶ anything outside it must be discarded.⁷

Thus, the Court cannot take into consideration the statements of witnesses examined by the police,⁸ or the evidence adduced in a counter case,⁹ or the result of a police inquiry not ordered by the Magistrate,¹⁰ or the result of an inquiry on a previous petition,¹¹ or the result of investigation ordered under S. 202 but not held in compliance with its terms;¹² again, the Court cannot ordinarily permit the opposite party to appear and argue that process should not issue. Where, however, the complainant has obtained an order for the seizure of the opposite party's books and for restraining him from operating on his banking account, the opposite party can appear and ask that such orders should be vacated.¹³ As to whether the proper course when a complaint is presented without the sanction required by S. 197 is to dismiss it under this section, see Note 11 under S. 197.

This section does not apply to complaints under the Merchant Shipping Act (XXI of 1923), which cannot therefore be dismissed under this section.¹⁴

2. "May dismiss the complaint." — Where a complaint is made to a Magistrate he has either to dismiss it under this section or issue process under S. 204.¹ He cannot pass any other kind of order.

Section 203
Note 2

Thus, he cannot direct the police to submit a charge-sheet to some other Magistrate,² or submit the complaint to the District Magistrate after disbelieving the complaint,³ or order the issue of a search warrant after holding that no criminal case would lie.^{3a}

Where a Magistrate dismisses a complaint under this section there must be a specific order to that effect.⁴ The order must be a judicial order.^{4a}

The following orders have been held to be dismissals of complaints under this section :

- (1) An order refusing to issue process on a complaint.⁵
- (2) An endorsement on a complaint, "Enter as false. No prosecution."⁶
- (3) An order staying proceedings against some accused while proceeding with the case against others; in this case there is dismissal of the complaint so far as the former persons are concerned.⁷
- (4) An order holding the complaint to be false and calling upon the complainant to show cause against his prosecution.⁸

The following orders have been held not to be dismissals of complaints under this section :

- (1) Where a charge is made to the police and is repeated in a complaint before the Magistrate and the Magistrate passes a departmental order to the police, "show as false" but no order is passed on the complaint itself.⁹
- (2) A direction to the police after a complaint was referred to them that the complaint may be struck off the police file.¹⁰

Notes 2-5

- (3) An order expunging a charge from the list of reported offences.¹¹
In this case there is no complaint at all to be dismissed.
- (4) An endorsement on the complaint "Notice is discharged."¹²
- (5) A refusal to take cognizance of an offence for want of sanction (now complaint) under S. 195.¹³
- (6) An order that the "accused is warned."¹⁴
- (7) An order of reference to arbitration, as it is not in the powers of a Magistrate to make such a reference.¹⁵
- (8) An order withdrawing a process once issued.¹⁶
- (9) An order for the issue of summary "C."¹⁷

3. Magistrate.—The word "Magistrate" must mean a Magistrate to whom the Code applies. The Code does not apply to proceedings before Village Magistrate (see section 1) and a dismissal by a Village Magistrate of such a proceeding is not dismissal of a complaint under this section.¹

4. Orders on complaint not to be delayed.—There is nothing in the Code to show that the Magistrate must, at once, consider the complaint.¹ He must, however, pass orders as expeditiously as possible; it will be improper to delay the passing of orders for months.² As to the disposal of counter-complaints, see the undermentioned case.³

5. "Sufficient ground for proceeding."—The question whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding must, as has been seen in Note 1 already, be based upon the materials referred to in the section, namely, the statement on oath of the complainant and the result of any investigation or inquiry under S. 202. Where the facts alleged in the complaint constitute an offence and there are no circumstances apparent in the examination of the complainant, such as contradictions, variations, or serious and unexplained delay in instituting proceedings, justifying the Court in concluding that the complaint is false, there would be a prima facie case for proceeding.¹ Where, on the other hand, the allegations contained in the complaint and in the complainant's oral statement disclose no criminal offence,² or are self-contradictory so as to be self-destructive or are physically impossible or involve an extreme degree of improbability, and so forth, as well as in cases in which the allegations made, though nothing can be said a priori of their possibility or probability, are practically incapable of proof, there can be no sufficient ground for proceeding.³ Unreasonable delay in filing a complaint under S. 211, Penal Code, has been held to be a sufficiently good reason for refusing to proceed with the complaint.⁴

Where the complaint shows only a civil dispute as to title or as to other civil claims, a Magistrate ought not to deal with them but should dismiss the complaint.⁵ The dividing line between criminal and civil liability is sometimes indistinguishable and the Magistrate

A Magistrate cannot dismiss a case off-hand unless a prima facie case of any kind is not made out.⁸ Where a prima facie case is made out, the following are not sufficient grounds on which a complaint can be dismissed :

- (1) The fact that besides the complainant other persons could complain against an accused.⁹
- (2) The fact that a libellous publication complained of is a mere republication.¹⁰
- (3) The withdrawal of the complaint by the complainant in a warrant case which is non-compoundable.¹¹
- (4) The absence of personal injury to the complainant and the complainant being a mere tool of another person.¹²
- (5) The fact that the complainant had no personal knowledge of the facts of the complaint.¹³
- (6) The fact that the complainant is of low caste.¹⁴
- (7) The fact that the charge might be laid to the police in the first instance.¹⁵

A complainant has a right to an adjudication on the point whether there is a sufficient ground for proceeding before his complaint is dismissed.²⁴ The decision whether there is sufficient ground for dismissing a complaint must be reached by the exercise of discretion based on judicial considerations.²⁵

It is only in very rare cases that a Court will be justified in throwing out a complaint without giving an opportunity to the complainant to substantiate his allegations; but in certain cases it becomes the duty of the Court to protect the accused from unnecessary harassment and worry, and prevent an abuse of the process of the Court.²⁶

6. Who can dismiss a complaint. — Under this section a complaint may be dismissed by —

- (1) the Magistrate before whom a complaint is made,
- (2) the Magistrate to whom it has been transferred,¹
- (3) the successor of the Magistrate who recorded the complaint and ordered inquiry.²

Even if the complaint is transferred to a superior Magistrate solely for the purpose of transferring it to another, the Magistrate to whom it is sent for transfer can dismiss a complaint under this section.³

The Magistrate to whom the complaint is transferred cannot, however, dismiss the complaint without giving notice to the complainant of such transfer.⁴

If a complaint is transferred at the very outset to another Magistrate, he has power to take action under ss. 202 and 203. But when one Magistrate has examined witnesses under S. 202 and believed them, and thereupon transfers the case to another Magistrate, the latter has no power to examine the same witnesses again and proceed to dismiss the complaint under this section.⁵

Where a complaint is dismissed under this section and further inquiry is ordered under S. 436, the Magistrate before whom the complaint comes for such further inquiry can again dismiss it under this section.⁶

7. Effect of dismissal. — A dismissal of a complaint after hearing the complainant and after considering the result of an investigation under S. 202 amounts to a legal determination of the complaint¹ and the complainant can be prosecuted for making a false charge under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code.^{1a} But until a complaint is dismissed under this section or otherwise disposed of, no proceedings can be taken under S. 182 or S. 211, Penal Code.² This rule is not based on any statute but is only a precautionary rule of safety in respect of prosecutions under S. 182 or S. 211 of the Penal Code. So, while a prosecution under those sections might in certain circumstances be delayed or even set aside in accordance with the practice, this practice could per se be no ground for setting aside a conviction under S. 211 or S. 182 before the disposal of the case.³

A mere dismissal under this section does not afford a ground for proceeding under S. 211, Penal Code.⁴ The complainant must be afforded an opportunity to prove his case before being prosecuted under S. 211 or S. 182, Penal Code;⁵ but where he has had such an opportunity and the dismissal of the complaint is made only after hearing him and taking

Where the dismissal under this section is illegal for want of the examination of the complainant under S. 200, the complainant cannot be prosecuted for bringing a false charge.⁷

As to whether an order for compensation can be made against the complainant when a complaint under this section is dismissed, see Note 7 to S. 250, and as to a suit for malicious prosecution, see Notes to S. 204.

Where a complaint has been dismissed under this section, it cannot be said that it was ever on the file; a District Magistrate has, therefore, no power under S. 436 to order that the complaint 'should be restored to file'.⁸

8. Dismissal without examining complainant.—The "statement on oath" referred to is the examination of the complainant under S. 200.¹ Where the complainant is present but not examined under that section, the material on which the Court could say whether there is sufficient ground or not is not availed of by the Court, and consequently the Court cannot dismiss the complaint.² But when ex parte, it cannot be said that the Magistrate is wrong in dismissing the complaint under this section.²

Section 203
Note 9

Where the inquiry ordered under S. 202 is found to have been insufficient, the Court of revision may set aside the dismissal of the complaint based on the result of such inquiry and may order a further inquiry.³ In complaints against police-officers and other Government officials it would be a proper exercise of discretion if the Magistrate orders an inquiry into the matter giving the complainant every opportunity to prove his allegations.⁴

The words "if any" clearly show that this section empowers the Magistrate to dismiss a complaint without any investigation or inquiry under S. 202, if after examining the complainant he considers there is no sufficient reason for proceeding.⁵

The words "if any" were omitted from the Code by the amending Act XVIII of 1923, but were restored to the section by the amending Act II of 1926. The reasons for re-insertion are given in the Statement of Objects and Reasons of the amending Act of 1926 as follows:

"The Calcutta High Court in a recent decision (in the case of Srish Chandra Bose v. Modan Lal Surma) has held that under S. 203, an investigation or an inquiry under S. 202 is necessary in all cases because the words 'if any' have been omitted from S. 203 after the words 'investigation or inquiry.' No such change was intended by the amendment made by Act XVIII of 1923 and the proposed addition is made to clear this matter."

Where on further inquiry being ordered into a complaint dismissed under this section, the case is sent to another Magistrate for disposal, he is entitled to act on the result of the inquiry or investigation ordered by the Magistrate who originally disposed of the case.⁶

10. "Shall record his reasons for so doing." — A Magistrate should record his reasons for dismissing a complaint under this section.¹ The object of this requirement is to enable the High Court to consider whether the discretion vested in the Magistrate has been properly exercised or not.² This is an imperative provision of law and where no reasons are recorded the order of dismissal is without jurisdiction.³ It has, however, been held that where on a complaint filed against several persons, the lower Court has declined to issue process against some of them and it appears to the High Court from the records that there are no sufficient grounds for issuing process against them, the High Court will not interfere in revision merely because the Magistrate has failed to give reasons for not issuing process; but that when it appears that the Magistrate had not good grounds for declining to issue process, the High Court will interfere in revision.⁴

It has been held that reasons stated in a police-report on the basis of which an order of dismissal is made are sufficient if the report itself is part of the order.⁵

11. Second complaint. — A dismissal under this section is a dismissal without trial. As to whether such a dismissal is a bar to the re-hearing of the complaint or to the entertainment of a second complaint, see S. 403 and Notes thereunder.

12. Further inquiry. — As to ordering of a "further inquiry" into a complaint dismissed under this section, see Note 9 above and S. 436 and Notes thereto.

13. Abatement. — See Note 6 under S. 247.

14. Appeal. — Under S. 404, no appeal will lie from any order, unless specifically provided for by the Code and no appeal is provided from an order of dismissal under this section. Further inquiry alone is provided for in S. 436.

1. Legislative changes.

- (1) The words "if he has not jurisdiction himself" in sub-section (1) are new.
- (2) Sub-section (3) is new.

2. Scope of the section.— Where the Magistrate does not dismiss the complaint under S. 203 but is of opinion that there is sufficient ground for proceeding, he has to commence proceedings against the accused by compelling his attendance before the Court. This section relates to the procedure for effecting such attendance.¹

This is the only section authorizing a Magistrate to issue process to an accused, whether he takes cognizance on a private complaint or on a police-report² or any information or knowledge other than a complaint or police-report.³ This section applies not only where the Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence under the Indian Penal Code but also where he takes cognizance of an offence under any other law.⁴

For form of summons, see S. 68 and Sch. V, Form No. I.

For form of warrant, see S. 75 and Sch. V, Form No. II.

3. Magistrate taking cognizance only can issue process. —

Section 190 mentions the ordinary ways in which a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence. Unless he 'takes cognizance' as specified therein, a process cannot be issued under this section.¹ A 'Magistrate taking cognizance' on a complaint is the officer who has heard the complaint made. He is the proper officer to issue a process because it is he who can best exercise a discretion with regard to the prima facie merits of the complaint.² Therefore, a District or superior Magistrate cannot order process to issue when a joint or subordinate Magistrate to whom a case has been made over for disposal³ or who has taken cognizance of the complaint,⁴ has failed or refused to issue process. If he wants to do so, he must remove the case to his own file and then issue process.

Under this section a Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S. 192 after the examination of the complainant can issue process though he has not himself examined the complainant.⁵

Although it is only the Magistrate who has taken cognizance of the offence who may direct issue of a process, a Magistrate who is the "presiding officer" within the meaning of Ss. 68 and 75, may sign the process, even if he may not have taken cognizance of the offence and directed issue of the process.⁶

4. The Magistrate must have taken cognizance of an offence. — It is only a Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence that can issue a process under this section. Where, therefore, no offence has been committed but the Magistrate gets information as to the possibility of an offence being committed, the matter is only one for the interference of the police, and not one for the Magistrate to issue process.¹

If, on a complaint, it should appear to the Court that the act imputed amounted to an offence under the Indian Penal Code or any other penal law in force, it is the duty of the Court to proceed with the matter.² But where the acts as alleged do not disclose any offence, it will be an abuse of the process of the Court to allow criminal proceedings to proceed.³

An application for maintenance under S. 488 is not a complaint in respect of any offence and, therefore, a Magistrate dealing with it cannot dismiss it under sub-s. (3) of this section.⁴

Even where an offence is disclosed there must be definite evidence of an offence within the local jurisdiction of the Magistrate receiving the complaint.⁵ The Court is not limited to the sections or offences mentioned in the complaint. The fact that the complainant did not specifically and in terms accuse any one under any section of the Penal Code, does not matter, if the facts stated in the complaint and his sworn statement, constitute an offence, triable by the Magistrate who receives the complaint.⁶

5. "Sufficient ground for proceeding." — A Magistrate taking cognizance of an offence is bound to issue process under this section

only if, in his opinion, there is sufficient ground for proceeding.¹ The stage at which the sufficiency of the ground for proceeding is to be considered is, in the case of a complaint, after the examination of the complainant under S. 200.² If the facts alleged in the complaint and the complainant's statement show a sufficient ground for proceeding, process should issue,³ otherwise not.⁴ It is not necessary in all cases that before issuing process the Magistrate should have held any inquiry.⁵

A prima facie case means that there is sufficient ground for proceeding.⁶ Where therefore a prima facie case is made out, the Magistrate should issue process⁷ even if he considers that a civil remedy is more appropriate.⁸ It was, however, held in the undermentioned case^{8a} that even if there was a prima facie case, the Magistrate may in his discretion refuse to issue process.

Section 204
Note 5

There cannot be said to be sufficient grounds in the following cases for issue of process:

- (1) Where the complaint is made on information and not on personal knowledge.⁹ In such cases the Court should satisfy itself on inquiry that there is a case for the issue of process.¹⁰
- (2) Where the allegations made in the complaint are not substantiated by the statement on oath.¹¹
- (3) Where the allegations disclose a dispute purely of a civil nature.¹²

The following are not sufficient grounds for refusing issue of process:

- (a) Where a prima facie case is made out but in the Magistrate's opinion there is no chance of conviction and no useful purpose will be served by the enquiry.¹³
- (b) Avoidance of religious ill-feeling.¹⁴
- (c) The fact that the offence is cognizable by the police in the first instance.¹⁵
- (d) The fact that the Magistrate thinks that it is unlikely that the proceedings will result in a conviction, though the fact that another person accused upon the same facts for the same offence has been acquitted may properly be taken into consideration in determining whether upon the materials before the Magistrate there is sufficient ground for proceeding.¹⁶

Notes 5-7

(e) The fact that one of the accused was a member of the highest service in the land who was sworn to do justice.¹⁷

Stay of proceedings — See Note 11 to S. 344.

6. "In the opinion of a Magistrate." — In deciding on the sufficiency of the ground for proceeding, the Magistrate must be guided by his own independent opinion and not by that of others such as a police-officer.¹

7. Issue of process. — This section provides that when a Magistrate who receives a complaint neither dismisses it under S. 203 nor postpones issue of process under S. 202, process for the attendance of the accused shall issue.¹ The fourth column in the second schedule indicates whether a summons or warrant should issue in the first instance in each case. But there are two exceptions to this rule. Firstly, in the cases in which a summons should issue in the first instance according to the second schedule, the Magistrate can, under S. 90, issue a warrant in lieu of or in addition to a summons in the circumstances specified in that section. Secondly, in cases in which a warrant should issue in the first instance according to the second schedule, this section enables the Magistrate to issue a summons instead, if he thinks fit to do so.² This discretion should be so used as not to subject accused persons to the indignity of arrest unless there is real need for it.³

If the Magistrate issues a warrant in a case in which he ought to have issued summons, the error is not a ground for setting aside the proceedings.⁴ The Magistrate in such cases can cancel the warrant and issue a summons.⁵

Process should ordinarily issue against all the accused who are prima facie shown to have committed an offence.⁶ But the Magistrate is not bound, when the police-report discloses one offender only, to issue process against any witnesses who may afterwards be found, during trial, to be accomplices.⁷ Nor is it imperative on him to proceed against a person who has been removed from the array of accused persons and is produced as a witness in the Court, his failure to do so not being sufficient to invalidate the trial in respect of the other accused.^{7a}

[See ('33) AIR 1933 Cal 552 (553) : 34 Cri L Jour 1063, Makhan Lal v. Sakhi. (The fact that the matter has been compounded with other co-accused is no ground for refusing process.)

Section 204
Note 7

It has been held that in proper cases there is nothing irregular or improper in a Magistrate first issuing process for one accused person and then changing his mind and issuing process for all the accused.⁸

When once the Magistrate issues process under this section, proceedings commence and it should go on in due course unless something occurs to show that the Magistrate has, for some cause or other, made a wrong exercise of his discretion.⁹ The question of commencement of proceedings becomes relevant in suits for damages for malicious prosecution or for prosecution for making false complaint, etc. Prosecution commences when proceedings commence under this section and proceedings commence when process is issued against the accused. So unless process is issued, there is no cause of action in either of the proceedings referred to above.¹⁰ The view that a prosecution commences even when a complaint is made¹¹ is, it is submitted, not well founded and is not an accepted one.

Where A and B are jointly accused of an offence but the Magistrate issues process only against A, B is competent to give evidence as a witness at the trial of A.¹²

Section 204

It has been held by the Patna High Court in the case cited below¹³ that an order by a Magistrate to the police to charge-sheet a person may be treated as a warrant under this section. See also S. 190 Note 22.

8. Omission to issue process. — Where a Magistrate without issuing any process at all to the accused convicts him, the conviction is illegal.¹ But where the accused appears in Court of his own accord without a summons, he is entitled to require that the case be proceeded with and the mere omission to issue summons becomes immaterial in such a case.²

9. Notice, if a "process." — A mere notice to the person complained against that a preliminary enquiry will be held does not amount to a summons. The issue of such a notice is neither contemplated by the Code nor included in the forms in schedule V.¹

10. Order directing summons, if a judgment. — An order directing issue of summons under this section is not a judgment. So where a Magistrate issued summons to an accused and the accused appeared and filed a cross-complaint, it was held that it was open to the Magistrate to rescind the order as to summons and send the complaints for enquiry under S. 202.¹

11. Order directing summons, if can be recalled. — An order issuing summons under this section, not being a judgment within the provisions of S. 369, there is nothing in the Code which forbids the Magistrate to reconsider such order on sufficient ground and recall the summons.¹

12. "If he has not jurisdiction himself." — A process is for attendance of the accused before the Magistrate issuing it; but there are cases where the Magistrate issuing process has no jurisdiction to try the case, as for example under S. 29A, in cases of complaint against an European British subject. Provision is made here for the attendance of the accused, in such cases, before another Magistrate having jurisdiction.

13. "Some other Magistrate having jurisdiction." — This expression means "some other Magistrate" having jurisdiction to enquire into and try the case, the power to take cognizance being distinct from jurisdiction.

14. "Provisions of Section 90"—Sub-section (2). — See Notes under Section 90.

15. Process-fee.—Sub-section (3) is new and enables a Magistrate to dismiss a case for default of payment of such fees for process as are payable and ordered, within a reasonable time. Even before this provision was inserted there existed the practice of dismissing the complaint for non-payment of process-fees, as for default of prosecution¹ though such a dismissal was held to be illegal in warrant cases.² The Legislature has given effect to that practice by the addition of this sub-section.

Where a complaint is against two persons, but the complainant has paid process fees for summons against one only, the other must be discharged under this sub-section, if no summons is taken against him.³

The process-fees referred to in this sub-section are only for the attendance of the accused at the commencement of proceedings and not for the presence of the accused on the date of judgment and a dismissal of the complaint under this sub-section for non-payment of process-fees for such summons is not legal.⁴

The section applies to Magistrates taking cognizance of offences and this rule as to payment of process-fees refers, therefore, only to cases when an 'offence' is disclosed. An application for maintenance under S. 488 should not be dismissed under this sub-section for failure to pay process-fees, as an order for maintenance is not a conviction for an offence.⁵

Where a complaint was dismissed under this sub-section in a de novo trial after charges had already been framed, it was held that it amounted merely to a discharge and not an acquittal, and that a second trial on the same facts would not be barred.⁶ See for further discussion, section 403.

Where a complaint is dismissed under this sub-section, the High Court, Sessions Judge or District Magistrate may, under S. 436, direct a further enquiry⁷ and in such a case notice to show cause why a further enquiry should not be ordered is neither desirable nor necessary.⁸

As to the fees payable, see S. 20 of the Court-fees Act, VII of 1870, and rules framed by the High Courts thereunder.

See also the undermentioned case.⁹

As to the applicability of this sub-section to processes to witnesses, see Notes to S. 544.

16. Revision. — The High Court has ample revisional powers to interfere with the proceedings under this section and can exercise its powers at any stage of the proceedings and quash the same, though it will interfere only in cases of an exceptional nature as where neither the complaint nor the prosecution disclosed a case against the accused, but process has been issued under this section.¹

Where a Magistrate, having followed the procedure laid down, has exercised a discretion judicially in issuing a process² or where the error, omission, or irregularity in the issue of process is one which is curable under S. 537,³ the High Court will not interfere. Similarly,

Changes introduced in 1872 —

Under the Code of 1861, it was doubtful whether the Court could dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in cases in which a warrant was ordinarily issuable on complaint. Section 151 of the Code of 1872 made it clear that the Court could do so "in cases, of whatever nature, in which the Magistrate thinks fit to issue a summons."

Changes introduced in 1882 —

- (1) The words "in cases of whatever nature" of the Code of 1872 were substituted by the words "whenever issue a summons."
- (2) The words "by his pleader" were substituted for the words "by an agent duly authorized." This is consequent on the definition of "pleader" newly added to the Code of 1882 in section 4 (1) (n). That definition included any person duly authorized.
- (3) The words "and if necessary provided" were newly added.

Code of 1898 — The section remains unchanged since 1882.

2. Scope. — The general principle of the Code is that an accused person cannot be proceeded against ex parte.¹ This section provides an exception to this general rule by enacting that the Magistrate may dispense with the personal attendance of the accused in a particular class of cases, namely those in which he issues a summons. At any stage of the proceedings, however, the Magistrate enquiring into, or trying the case can direct the personal attendance of the accused if his presence is found necessary.

This section applies only to Magistrates and not to Courts of Session or the High Court. But s. 353 shows that the latter Courts have got similar power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused.² The High Court can also under its inherent powers recognized by s. 561A, dispense with such attendance.³ See also s. 116 and s. 540A.

3. "Whenever a Magistrate issues a summons." — This section does not apply where a warrant has been issued¹ or the accused has been arrested without a warrant.² Where, however, a summons has been issued in the first instance and thereafter the accused is brought in under a warrant of arrest, the section would apply.³ A summons can under S. 204 be issued even in cases in which a warrant is ordinarily issuable; this section will apply even to such cases if a summons has been issued.⁴ Even where a warrant has been issued, the Magistrate may cancel the warrant and issue a summons,⁵ or the accused having appeared before him, it may not be necessary for him to issue a summons for the appearance of the accused.⁶ In both these cases also this section will apply. All that is required under this section is that the Magistrate should consider that a summons is sufficient for the appearance of the accused in the case and if he is of that opinion he may then permit the accused to appear by pleader.⁷

4. "Dispense with." — The words "may, if he sees reason so to do" show that the Magistrate has a discretion to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused or not as he thinks fit. The discretion will, however, be used liberally especially in trivial cases such as a prosecution for a municipal offence,¹ or where the accused is a pardanashin lady,² or where the accused is too ill to attend Court.³ In such cases if the permission is refused, reasons for such refusal should be recorded.⁴

In considering the propriety of an order under this section, the Magistrate should always take into account whether there is any material before him to indicate that an offence has been committed by the accused and whether there is anything in the nature of a prima facie case.⁵

A Magistrate can dispense with the personal attendance of the accused as often as he pleases.⁶

It is not necessary that there should be an express order dispensing with the personal attendance. But it is advisable that the fact should be noted in the records and not be left for implication, although omission to do so would only be an irregularity which will not justify

5. Bond from the accused.—Where the personal attendance of an accused is dispensed with, a recognizance bond may be taken from him binding him to appear either in person or by pleader, and if the pleader neglects to attend when the case is called on, the bond may be forfeited and the accused made liable for the payment of the penalty. The bond cannot be taken from his pleader nor can his pleader be bound by such a bond to attend.¹

6. Pardanashin lady. — Where a Magistrate issues a summons to a pardanashin woman who is accused of an offence, he should, as a general rule, dispense with her personal attendance and permit her to appear by pleader at least until such time as he has before him some legal and satisfactory evidence indicative of her having committed a breach of the law.¹ Such an order should not be refused merely because —

- (1) the Magistrate thinks that she is not pardanashin,² or
- (2) other women belonging to the same class that observed pardah had appeared in Court,³ or
- (3) she is the daughter of a prostitute, if she is married to a respectable husband in whose family women observe pardah.⁴

The Court will extend the privilege of pardah to women who, though not strictly observing pardah, are yet not accustomed generally to appear before the public.⁵ This section is one which should be freely utilised in Sind where so much prejudice exists against the appearance of females generally in public.⁶

As to the right of a pardanashin woman to be exempted from personal attendance —

7. "Permit him to appear by his pleader." — Although the personal attendance of the accused may be dispensed with under this section, it is essential that he should be represented by his pleader. The reason is that it is necessary that some one should be present at the trial to look after the interests of the accused, and the law considers that such interest will be completely safeguarded if his pleader is in attendance.¹

The words "appear by pleader" in their ordinary acceptance mean "represented by pleader," that is, having a pleader to act and to plead.²

The appearance by a pleader involves the performance of all acts that devolve upon the accused in the course of the trial³ such as the following —

- (1) pleading guilty or not guilty under S. 255 and in cases falling under ss. 242 and 243,⁴
- (2) filing a written statement embodying the plea of the accused,⁵
- (3) making the necessary answers to an examination under S. 342,⁶
- (4) hearing a deposition of a witness read over, under S. 360 (1),⁷
- (5) hearing of a judgment, the sentence being one of fine only or the accused being acquitted under S. 366 (2).⁸

Form No. 1 of schedule V of the Code shows that the summons to an accused person may itself direct whether the accused is to appear in person or by pleader. In other words, the Magistrate may, even at the time of issuing summons, dispense with the personal attendance of the accused and permit him to appear by pleader.⁹ When a summons is sent as in Form No. 1 of schedule V, containing the words "you are hereby required to appear in person or by pleader" and the accused sends his pleader who requests for permission to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused, the Magistrate cannot proceed against the accused for disobedience of the summons, even though he refuses to grant the permission. If he wants his personal attendance, an order directing such attendance should be made.¹⁰

The power to dispense with the personal attendance of the accused can be exercised by the Magistrate only so far as his own Court is concerned. He cannot, for instance, grant or refuse permission to appear through a pleader in the Sessions Court to which he commits the accused.¹¹

8. "Pleader." — Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, the Court could, when dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused, permit him to appear by an agent duly authorized.¹ Under the present Code, the Court can permit him to appear only by his pleader. But the definition of the word "pleader" as now given in S. 4 (1) (r), is very wide and includes any person appointed by the accused with the permission of the Court to act in the proceedings against him.² In order that a person, other than a pleader authorized by law to practise in the Court, should be a "pleader" within the meaning of S. 4 (1) (r), it is necessary that —

- (1) he should have been appointed by the accused to act for him, and
- (2) the Court should permit him to so act.

The appointment and the permission need not, however, be express but may be implied from the circumstances of the case.^{2a} Thus, where the father-in-law of the accused who was unwell appeared in Court on her behalf and the trying Magistrate thereupon proceeded with the case, it was assumed that the Magistrate must have given the necessary permission.³

It is, however, generally advisable that something should be noted on the record to show that the person who represents the accused has been duly appointed by him and the Court has given the requisite permission for his appearance in place of the accused.⁴

In the absence of an appointment by the accused of any person to represent him, the mere permission of the Magistrate will not entitle any person to act as a pleader for the accused, and the Magistrate would have no jurisdiction to proceed with the case in the absence of the accused.⁵

9. Applicability to security proceedings.—This section applies to proceedings under S.106 in chapter VIII Division A for the reason that the person against whom the proceedings are taken is an accused person. But it does not apply to proceedings under Ss.107 to 110, in chapter VIII Division B,¹ inasmuch as in such proceedings the persons proceeded against are not accused persons. But independently of this section, S.116 provides for dispensing with the personal attendance of the persons proceeded against in such cases.

10. "At any stage of the proceedings." — Where the Court has allowed the accused to appear by pleader, but thinks it necessary or desirable that the accused should be present in person for any particular purpose, such as for examination by the Court under S.342 or for pleading to a charge under S.255, he may order the personal appearance of the accused.¹ Where the accused is convicted and the sentence is not one of fine only, the Magistrate must, under S.366, sub-s.(2), direct the personal attendance of the accused for hearing the judgment.² Though at any time the Magistrate can revoke the permission given to the accused to appear by a pleader, yet he should not do so in a trivial case such as an income-tax prosecution and on a trivial ground such as that the accused objects to the case being tried by that Magistrate and wants a transfer of his case to some other Magistrate.³

11. Revision. — Where the Magistrate has refused to excuse the personal attendance of an accused person, the High Court will in proper cases interfere in revision and will dispense with his presence.¹

The High Court will not, however, interfere where the irregularity alleged is the mere omission of the Magistrate to make a record that he has given permission to the accused to appear by his pleader,² or where the case itself is an extremely trivial one.³

But where there is a complete absence of jurisdiction as where the Magistrate dispenses with the presence of the accused in a case in which a warrant has been issued, the High Court will set aside the order giving such permission.⁴

A sub-divisional Magistrate cannot, in revision, cancel the order of a Bench Court dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused. He can only forward the record to the District Magistrate who should, under S. 438 of the Code, refer the matter to the High Court.⁵

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF INQUIRY INTO CASES TRIABLE BY THE COURT OF SESSION OR HIGH COURT.

Section 206

206.* (1) Any Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class, or any Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the third class) empowered in this behalf by the Provincial Government,^a may commit any person for trial to the Court of Session or High Court for any offence triable by such Court.

(2) But, save as herein otherwise provided, no person triable by the Court of Session shall be committed for trial to the High Court.

Section 206

1. Chapter XVIII — General. — Section 193 provides that a Sessions Court can take cognizance of a case in the exercise of its original jurisdiction only when the accused has been committed to it for trial. Section 194 provides that the High Court may take cognizance of offences upon commitment made to it. This chapter specifies the Magistrate who may pass orders of committal, and prescribes the procedure to be followed by him for the purpose.

The inquiry prescribed by the chapter is called a preliminary inquiry; and before a Magistrate commits a case for trial to a Sessions Court, he must hold such a preliminary inquiry into the facts alleged against the accused¹ and satisfy himself that there is a real case for trial.²

The object of such an inquiry is two-fold: firstly, in order to prevent the committal of cases in which there is no reasonable ground for conviction, so as, on the one hand, to save the accused from the prolonged anxiety of undergoing a trial for offences that cannot be brought home to him, and, on the other, to save the time of the Court being wasted over cases in which the evidence would obviously not justify a conviction.³ Secondly, in order to provide that no person shall be committed for trial without being previously made acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the offence imputed to him and without being given a fair opportunity of meeting them.⁴

2. Legislative changes.

Amendment Act, XII of 1923, in view of the amendment of S. 443 effected by the said amending Act.

- (2) The words "(not being a Magistrate of the third class)" were newly introduced into the section by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

3. "Magistrates empowered in this behalf." — As the section now stands, the following Magistrates have powers of committal —

Presidency Magistrates; District Magistrates; Sub-divisional Magistrates; Magistrates of the first class; and Magistrates of the second class, if they are specially empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf.¹

Before the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923, even Magistrates of the third class could be empowered to commit and in Madras all Magistrates had been so empowered to commit² except Tahsildar Magistrates of Taluqs, where there were Stationary Sub-Magistrates.³ The introduction of the words "not being a Magistrate of the third class" shows that third class Magistrates cannot now be so empowered.

The British Consul at Zanzibar is a Magistrate empowered to commit accused for trial to the High Court of Bombay.⁴

A District or sub-divisional Magistrate to whom a sub-Magistrate has submitted the case under S. 349 has got the power to commit the case to the Court of Session;⁵ but he has no power to send the case back to the sub-Magistrate with directions to commit it.⁶ See also Notes 14 and 16 under S. 349.

A Magistrate having power to commit does not lose the power merely because he has been specially appointed to try the accused.⁷

A Presidency Magistrate's jurisdiction to commit a case is not ousted by the fact that the coroner has held an inquiry and has drawn up an inquisition under Act IV of 1871.⁸

4. Effect of committal by Magistrate having no power of committal.
— See Section 532.

5. "May commit." — The procedure laid down in chapter XVIII is not confined to cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session but is

Note 5

(1) If the case is one exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter and cannot try the case himself.² And when the facts prima facie disclose such an offence the Magistrate should commit the case and will not be justified in trying the case for deciding whether it constitutes a lesser offence.³

(2) Conversely, if the offence is not of a nature triable by a Court of Session at all, this chapter will not apply and the Magistrate must try the case himself.⁴

(3) If the offence is one triable both by a Court of Session and by himself, the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to try the case himself or to proceed under this chapter.⁵ As to the proper exercise of discretion in such cases, see Note 4 to S. 317. Even in cases not triable by the Magistrate but triable by a Court of Session or by some other Magistrate, he has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to send the case for trial by the proper Magistrate.⁶

If at the time a Magistrate is asked to take cognizance of a case, he is ab initio convinced that the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session, he must commence proceedings under this chapter. But there is nothing to prevent a Magistrate who started with the trial of a case from subsequently deciding to commit it for trial by a Sessions Court.⁷ In such cases the proceedings need not be started afresh but the Magistrate may proceed from where he left and continue the enquiry under this chapter.⁸

6. "Triable by such Court"—Not only exclusively but also from the nature of the case. — It has been seen in Note 5 that in cases exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the procedure prescribed by this chapter must be adopted and that in cases not so exclusively triable, the Magistrate has a discretion to decide whether to proceed under this chapter or to try the case himself. In the latter class of cases, the Magistrate must proceed under this chapter if in his opinion, the case ought to be tried by a Court of Session.¹ As to the principles on which this discretion ought to be exercised, see Note 4 to section 317.

See section 435 Note 13. But when a sub-Magistrate has discharged the accused, the District Magistrate, if satisfied that the discharge was improper, may interfere under S. 436 and order committal. 11. Sub-section (2).— Though this sub-section prohibits committal to the High Court of cases triable by a Court of Session, there is nothing to prevent the High Court from trying cases committed to it by a mofussil Court, by exercising the power given to the High Court by S. 526 sub-s.(1).¹

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section contemplates a commitment to the Court of Session or High Court in two cases, (a) where the offence is exclusively triable by a Court of Session or High Court and (b) where the offence is triable by a Court of Session or High Court as well as by a Magistrate but the Magistrate is of the opinion that it ought to be tried by a Court of Session or High Court. Where an offence though triable by a Court of Session or High Court is neither exclusively triable by such Court nor one which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court, the Magistrate cannot commit it to the Sessions Court.¹ Where an offence is not triable at all by a Court of Session it cannot be committed to the Sessions: vide S. 206.

A preliminary inquiry as prescribed by this chapter is not necessary where a case is committed to the Court of Session in obedience to the lawful orders of a superior Court.²

3. "Ought to be tried." — See Note 4 to S. 347.

4. Procedure where there are two or more offences one of which is triable only by a Court of Session. — Where an accused is charged with two or more offences one of which is exclusively triable or ought to be tried by a Court of Session, the procedure under this chapter should be followed and the proper course is to commit him for trial for all the offences.¹ So also, where several persons are jointly charged in respect of one transaction and it appears from the facts implicating the whole of them that one has committed an aggravated

Code of 1861 : Ss. 186, 193, 194 and 207.

186. The Magistrate shall ascertain from the complainant, or otherwise, the names of any persons who may be acquainted with the facts and circumstances of the case and who are likely to give evidence for the prosecution, and shall issue his summons to such persons, requiring them to appear at a time and place mentioned in the summons before such Magistrate to testify what they know concerning the complaint made against the accused person.

193. The Magistrate shall take the evidence of the complainant, and of such persons as are stated to have any knowledge of the facts which form the subject-matter of the accusation and the attendant circumstances.

194. * * * * *
The accused person or his agent shall be permitted to examine and re-examine his own witnesses, and to cross-examine the complainant and his witnesses.

Discretionary with the Magistrate to take evidence for the defence. 207. It shall be at the discretion of the Magistrate to summon any witness who may be offered in behalf of the accused person to answer or disprove the evidence against him.

1. Legislative changes.—The Code of 1882 did not contain any provision corresponding to sub-s.(2), though the prior Codes contained such a provision. The sub-section was inserted in the Code of 1898. See Note 10, below.

2. Object of the section. — This section is intended for the benefit of the accused. Its object is that the accused should be made aware of all the evidence that he will have to meet on his trial and also that he should have a full opportunity of convincing the Magistrate that there are not sufficient grounds for committing him for trial.¹

3. "When the accused appears or is brought before him."— It is necessary for a preliminary inquiry under this chapter that there must be an accused person. Where an inquiry was held in which a certain person was not put in the situation of an accused person at all but was himself examined on solemn affirmation like other witnesses, and was not given any opportunity of cross-examining the other witnesses, and then was committed to the Court of Session on a charge which was the result of the inquiry, it was held that the commitment was illegal.¹

The "appearance" of the accused under this section may be voluntary and need not be under any process issued against him under S. 204.²

4. "Shall proceed to hear."— Under S. 344, the Magistrate can postpone the commencement of the enquiry for any reasonable cause.

5. "Hear the complainant (if any)." — The section requires that the complainant shall be heard, not necessarily examined.¹

6. Take all such evidence.—In an inquiry under this chapter the Magistrate is bound, before he draws up a charge, to take all such evidence as may be produced (1) in support of the prosecution, (2) on behalf of the accused or (3) as may be called for by the Magistrate,¹ unless the evidence is irrelevant or unnecessary to prove the point in issue.² It is the duty of the Magistrate to record the evidence fully in order that the accused may have ample notice of the matter with which he is charged, and of the evidence by which the prosecutor seeks to prove the case.³ He is not absolved from recording all the evidence produced under this section, even in cases where the accused has confessed his guilt inasmuch as such confessions are often retracted later on.⁴ It ought to be the endeavour of the Magistrate in the inquiry under this section to ascertain the fact of a particular offence and collect evidence thereof before commitment and not to expect convictions at the Court of Session on a vague and multifarious evidence causing suspicion of several offences but yielding proof of none.⁵ As to whether the inquiry should be directed to ascertaining the guilt or innocence of the accused definitely or only to find out if there are prima facie grounds for believing the accused to be guilty, see Note 5 under S. 209.

7. Evidence for the prosecution.—The object of the prosecution is not to secure a conviction at any cost but to see that justice is done. Hence it is the duty of the prosecution to call as witnesses all persons who have been eyewitnesses or otherwise connected with the transaction although the evidence of any of them may be favourable to the accused, and an adverse inference can be drawn from the failure to call any material witness.¹ But the prosecution is not under any duty to call witnesses whom it regards as false or unnecessary.² If the prosecution has not sent up any material witness, it is the duty of the Magistrate to call such witness and examine him himself.³ The examination of the investigating police-officer is necessary in all important cases, especially of murder and dacoity.⁴

8. Evidence for the accused. — Under this section it is the duty of the Magistrate to take all the evidence produced by the accused before framing a charge. A commitment order passed without taking the evidence produced for the defence is illegal and liable to be quashed.¹ It has been held in the undermentioned case² that the rule laid down in this section is limited to examination of witnesses produced by the defence and should not be enlarged to include witnesses whom the accused might be prepared to produce.

9. "In manner hereinafter provided." — These words refer to chapter XXV.¹

10. Sub-section (2) — Right of cross-examination. — Section 194 of the Code of 1861 and S. 191 of the Code of 1872 expressly declared the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before commitment.¹ The 1882 Code omitted this provision as a redundancy, since even under S. 138 of the Evidence Act, 1872, which provides that the opposite party has the right to cross-examine the witnesses examined by a party, the accused can cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But this omission gave room for doubts² to remove which sub-s. (2) was inserted in 1898. The accused is now, of right, entitled to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution during the preliminary enquiry before the charge is framed.³ The refusal or omission of the Magistrate to give the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution is a legal flaw and will render the order of commitment liable to be set aside⁴ unless the accused has reserved the cross-examination to the Sessions Court.⁵

The proper time to exercise the right of cross-examination is after the examination-in-chief of each witness. The accused has no right to reserve his cross-examination till the examination-in-chief of all the prosecution witnesses is over.⁶ But the Magistrate has a discretion in the exercise of his inherent power in suitable circumstances to allow the accused to reserve his cross-examination.⁷

If the Magistrate, in the exercise of his discretion, permits the reservation of cross-examination, he cannot then refuse to recall the prosecution witnesses.⁸ Thus, where the accused applies for copies of statements made by prosecution witnesses to the police during the investigation with a view to cross-examine the witnesses and the Magistrate has ordered such copies to be furnished under S. 162, he is bound to postpone the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses till such copies are obtained and then allow cross-examination with reference to such statements.⁹

A Magistrate has no power to curtail the cross-examination of witnesses, by directing the counsel for the accused not to put more than six to eight questions to each witness.¹⁰ The cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under this section need not be confined to matters elicited in examination-in-chief.¹¹ This sub-section speaks of the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But the Magistrate himself can cross-examine them if he thinks it necessary to do so for ascertaining the truth of the prosecution story.¹² (vide S. 165, Evidence Act.)

As to the right of the accused to cross-examine in cases commenced as trials but subsequently considered by Magistrate to be fit to be committed to sessions, see S. 347 Note 5.

11. Sub-s. (3) — Summoning of witnesses. — Under this sub-section, the Magistrate is bound to issue process for the attendance of any witness or the production of any document when such process is applied for, either by the prosecution or the accused¹ unless he deems it unnecessary to do so.² If he refuses to issue process, he must record his reasons for his refusal and an omission to record such reasons is an illegality and the subsequent order, either of discharge, or of commitment is liable to be set aside.³ Inordinate delay in applying for summons is a proper reason to refuse process.⁴ So also, if it is brought to the notice of the Magistrate that the witnesses were summoned for the purpose of causing vexation to those witnesses, the Magistrate can refuse to issue summons.⁵ But the Magistrate should not refuse to call evidence on behalf of the accused merely because he will have ample opportunity to produce evidence later on, when he is committed to the sessions.⁶ If the Magistrate has exercised his discretion and recorded his reasons for such refusal, the revisional Court will not interfere with it unless the reason appears on the face of it to be untenable.⁷ A Magistrate is bound to take the evidence of the witnesses summoned under this section.⁸

As to the power of the Magistrate to require process fees and other fees, see Notes to S. 514.

1. Legislative changes.Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

- (1) The words "or High Court" were added after the words "Court of Session" in the Code of 1872.
- (2) If the Magistrate should hold that the accused person should be tried before himself, the Code of 1861 provided that he should proceed under chapter 14 thereof which related to the procedure to be followed in the trial of warrant cases; but the Code of 1872 provided that in such circumstances the Magistrate should proceed under chapters 16, 17 or 18 thereof (which laid down the procedure for the trial of summons cases and warrant cases and for summary trials respectively).
- (3) Three explanations were added to the section in the Code of 1872. Explanation I provided that, except in compoundable cases, the absence of the complainant was not in itself a sufficient ground of discharge. Explanation II provided that a discharge was not equivalent to an acquittal and did not bar the revival of a prosecution for the same offence. Explanation III provided that an order of discharge could not be made until the evidence of all the witnesses named for the prosecution had been taken.

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The words relating to the taking of evidence referred to in S. 209 and the examination of the accused were added at the beginning of the section.
- (2) The words "before the Court of Session or High Court, or for remanding him" which occurred after the words "for committing the accused person to take his trial" in the Code of 1872 were omitted.

- (3) The words "or some other Magistrate" after the word "himself" were added in the Code of 1882.
- (4) The three explanations to the section referred to above which occurred in the Code of 1872 were omitted.
- (5) The second paragraph to the section, providing for the discharge of the accused before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution and the defence, was added.

Changes made in 1898 —

- (1) The words "if necessary" were added after the words "he has" and before the words "examined the accused."
- (2) The words requiring reasons to be recorded for an order of discharge under sub-s.(1) were added.

2. Scope of the section.—This section specifies the procedure to be adopted where, after the evidence referred to in S. 208 has been taken, the Magistrate finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused. Where there are sufficient grounds, a charge should be framed under S. 210. There may be a further examination of witnesses after the charge is framed (Ss. 211 and 212), and, if the Magistrate is satisfied after such examination that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the Court of Session, he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused (S. 213, sub-s.(2)).

The provisions of this section may be compared with those of S. 253 which deals with the discharge of an accused person in the trial of warrant cases. The following are the chief points of distinction between the two sections:

- (1) The ground of discharge under this section is that the Magistrate holds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial; under S. 253 the ground of discharge is that the Magistrate holds that no case has been made out against the accused which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction.
- (2) The order of discharge under this section is passed after the evidence for the prosecution as well as that for the defence has been taken; while under S. 253 the order of discharge is passed before the evidence for the defence is taken.
- (3) Under sub-s.(2) of S. 209, as well as of S. 253 the Magistrate can discharge the accused even before the whole of the evidence referred to in sub-s.(1) of the respective sections has been taken. But under S. 209 the Magistrate must record the reasons whether the order of discharge is under sub-s.(1) or under sub-s.(2); while under S. 253 no reasons need be recorded for an order of discharge under sub-s.(1) though reasons have to be recorded in case of discharge under sub-s.(2).
- (4) There is no provision in the trial of warrant cases for cancelling a charge once framed and for discharging the accused. There is such a provision in the case of preliminary enquiries in sessions cases (S. 213).

3. "When the evidence referred to in S. 208, sub-ss. (1) and (3) has been taken." — Except in cases coming under sub-s.(2) the Magistrate must hear all the evidence referred to in S. 203, sub-ss.(1) and (3), before he can consider whether there are, or are not, sufficient grounds for commitment.¹ Such evidence includes evidence both for the prosecution as well as the defence and, hence, it is not open to a Magistrate merely on the evidence for the prosecution and before he has taken the evidence for the defence, to consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused.^{1a} The contrary view² though tenable under the Codes of 1872 and 1861³ cannot be considered good law under the present Code in view of the express language of this section.

Under sub-s.(3) of S. 203, if the prosecution or the accused applies to the Magistrate to issue summons for the attendance of any witnesses whose evidence may be desired, it is open to the Magistrate to refuse the application, if he thinks fit to do so. This section by requiring the Magistrate to take the evidence referred to in sub-s.(3) of S. 203 before considering if there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused does not deprive him of the discretion he has under that sub-section to refuse to summon any witness whom a party may desire to summon.⁴

Although it is open to an accused to insist on giving his evidence before the Magistrate frames a charge against him or decides to discharge him, yet, an accused is not bound to tender any evidence in the preliminary inquiry and his refusal to produce any evidence in such inquiry cannot give rise to any adverse inference against him.⁵

Sub-section (2) expressly reserves the power of the Magistrate to discharge an accused person even before he has taken any evidence, if he finds that the charge is groundless. See Note 12.

4. Examination of the accused. — See S. 342 and Notes thereunder.

5. Sufficient grounds for committing the accused. — In commitment proceedings, what the Magistrate has to see is whether there are sufficient grounds for commitment and not whether there are sufficient grounds for conviction. Hence, where there is a prima facie case for commitment the Magistrate is bound to commit the accused and is not empowered to enter into nice questions of the probabilities of the case and discharge the accused on the ground that in his opinion the evidence is not sufficient to sustain a conviction.¹ But, in order to satisfy himself that there are sufficient grounds for committing the

6. "Shall discharge him." — It has been seen in Note 5 that when the Magistrate finds that there are no sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he is bound to discharge him. Hence, where in a proceeding against A some of the witnesses say that the offence was committed by B, the Magistrate should not suspend the proceeding against A and go on with the case against B, with a view to commit either the one or the other of them. The Magistrate should go on with the inquiry against A, and proceeding should not be started against B until A is either convicted, acquitted or discharged.¹

It has been held that an order of discharge may be presumed to have been made though there is no formal order on the record.² Similarly, it has been held that where a person is charged with a major offence and the Magistrate, finding that such a charge does not lie, frames a charge for a minor offence and proceeds on the basis of such charge, his proceeding amounts to a discharge of the accused with reference to the major offence so as to enable a Court of revision to direct a further inquiry or a commitment to the sessions.³ But, where the prosecution did not press for a charge being framed for a major offence, the mere fact that the accused has been charged with a minor offence does not mean that he has been discharged in respect of the major offence.⁴

7. Effect of order of discharge. — An order of discharge does not operate as an acquittal and does not bar a fresh trial of the accused for the same offence (S. 403). But the person discharged is no longer an accused person and the disqualification of an accused person to give evidence in his own case does not attach to him.¹ A discharge is also such a termination of a prosecution as would entitle the discharged person to maintain an action for damages for malicious prosecution.²

8. Power of Magistrate to award compensation to accused on discharge. — See S. 250 and Notes thereunder.

9. Recording reasons for discharge. — The Magistrate must record his reasons when he discharges an accused person under this section.¹ But he need not record a formal judgment as laid down in S. 367.² Where there are several accused and different accused are discharged at different stages of the inquiry, it is enough if the reasons for their discharge are recorded at the end of the inquiry.³

10. Order by superior Court for further inquiry or commitment to sessions. — See Ss. 435 to 439 and Notes thereunder.

11. "Unless it appears . . . accordingly." — Where there are not sufficient grounds for commitment, the Magistrate may, in proper cases, try the case himself or send it to any other Magistrate for trial instead of discharging the accused.¹ But where there are good grounds for commitment the Magistrate is bound to frame a charge and commit the case to the Court of Session. He has no power in such cases to send the case to a Magistrate with special powers under S. 30, although such specially empowered Magistrate may have jurisdiction to try the offence.² A Magistrate should not treat a grave offence beyond his jurisdiction as a less grave offence in order to bring it within his jurisdiction.³

12. Sub-section (2)—Discharge without completing inquiry where charge is groundless. — Section 195 of the Code of 1872 expressly forbade a Magistrate in a preliminary inquiry under this chapter to discharge an accused person before completely taking the evidence for the prosecution. This provision has been omitted in the later Codes and sub-s. (2) has been added which expressly permits the Magistrate to discharge an accused person at any stage of the inquiry

if he finds that the charge is groundless although he has not fully taken the evidence either for the prosecution or for the accused.¹ Thus, when the account given by the prosecutor himself, of a transaction is of such a nature as to deprive it of a criminal character, the Magistrate is justified in concluding that the charge is groundless and in discharging the accused immediately without proceeding further with the inquiry.² But an order of discharge under this sub-section can only be passed by a Magistrate who is legally seised of the case. Thus, where a case cannot be taken cognizance of, for want of a complaint from the proper source under S. 195, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused under this sub-section.³

1. Legislative changes (S. 210 and S. 213).

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

Referring to the circumstances under which a case could be committed to the sessions, S. 226 of the Code of 1861 used the words "when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to be sufficient for the conviction of the accused" whereas the words used in S. 196 of the Code of 1872 were "when evidence has been given before a Magistrate which appears to justify him in sending the accused person to take his trial"

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) The opening words of the section were added in order to make it clear that the Magistrate must consider the evidence for the accused also before determining the question whether he should discharge the accused or whether he should frame a charge against him.

- (2) The provision for the supply of a translation of the charge to the accused, which occurred in the prior Code (S.193), was omitted.
- (3) The provision that the supply of a copy of the charge to the accused should be free of cost was new.
- (4) The Code of 1872 provided that the order for commitment should be made in the charge itself (S.193 of the Code) whereas the Code of 1882 provided for a separate order of commitment (S. 213).

Changes made in 1898 —

Sub-section (2) to S. 213 was newly added providing for the cancellation of a charge already framed by the Magistrate and the discharge of the accused even after a charge was framed against him.

2. Scope of the section.—Section 209 lays down when an accused person may be discharged in commitment proceedings. This section provides for the framing of a charge in such proceedings. A charge under this section should be framed only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are good grounds for commitment. But the mere framing of a charge does not, by itself, amount to a commitment, which should be made by a separate order under S. 213.¹ It may also be noted that the order of commitment under S. 213 cannot be made immediately on a charge being framed, or simultaneously with it² without anything further being done. There is a further procedure to be followed under ss. 211 to 213 before an order of commitment can be made. Moreover, it is open to a Magistrate to take further evidence after the charge is framed and if upon such evidence being taken, he finds there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused, he can cancel the charge and discharge the accused.³ It is also open to a Magistrate to amend the charge after it is framed and proceed to try the case himself instead of committing it to the sessions.⁴

3. "When upon such evidence being taken." — This expression refers to the evidence mentioned in S. 208, sub-ss. (1) and (3).¹ The section requires that the Magistrate should consider whether there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused to the sessions, only after such evidence has been taken. Hence, the Magistrate has no power to frame a charge under this section until he has taken all the evidence which the accused may desire to produce.² But this does not.

mean that a Magistrate is bound to summon any witness that a party may desire to call; under sub-s.(3) of S. 208 the Magistrate has a discretion to refuse an application for summons to any witness.³ Similarly, the Magistrate need not go on recording evidence when it is unnecessary to do so. Thus, when the evidence already let in by the prosecution is sufficient to establish a prima facie case against the accused, the Magistrate is not bound to take the rest of the prosecution evidence also.⁴ Section 208, sub-s.(1) empowers the Magistrate to call for any evidence that he may consider necessary and it is open to him to call witnesses himself and take their evidence for the purpose of finding out if the case is a fit one for committal to the sessions.⁵

"Is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for committing the accused." — A charge must be framed under this section only on the Magistrate being satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for commitment.¹ As to what are sufficient grounds for commitment, see Notes under S. 209 and the undermentioned cases.²

6. "He shall frame a charge." — The task of framing a charge is the duty of the Magistrate and not of the prosecutor.¹ The Magistrate must base the charge on the materials before him and not merely on the allegations of the complainant or prosecutor. He may frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the evidence though it may be different from that mentioned in the complaint.² In framing a charge, the Magistrate must confine his attention to the question as to what offence is disclosed on the materials before him and should not be influenced by any considerations as to what would be the effect

Where the accused is not under the age of fifteen years he cannot be ordered to be detained in a reformatory.¹ The Magistrate should determine precisely the age of the accused by enquiry before action is taken under this section.²

3. "Is sentenced to imprisonment." — The same words "is sentenced" occur also in s.8 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897. It has been held in cases arising under that section that where the accused is not sentenced to imprisonment for any offence the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make an order for detention in a reformatory school.¹ The same view must prevail in cases arising under this section. Where it is deemed necessary to have a convicted person sent to a reformatory, the proper procedure is to impose a substantive sentence and then direct that, in lieu thereof, the accused be detained in a reformatory.² The liability to be sent to a reformatory school³ or a non-existence of a reformatory⁴ is not a matter to be considered in estimating the sentence to be passed on a juvenile offender. A person who is ordered to execute a bond to keep the peace or for good behaviour and in default to undergo imprisonment for that period is not "sentenced to imprisonment" and so cannot be sent to a reformatory.⁵ Similarly, a person sentenced to pay fine or in default to undergo imprisonment is not "sentenced to imprisonment."⁶ Nor is a sentence of whipping a "sentence of imprisonment" for the purpose of sending the accused to a reformatory.⁷

4. "May direct." — It is not every boy that is convicted of an offence that can be sent to a reformatory school; only such boys as are found to be proper persons to be the inmates of such a school could be ordered to be so sent. As a rule, no boy should be sent to a reformatory on first conviction unless there is a reasonable cause for supposing that he is being trained up to or is likely again to lapse into crime, being without parental or other control.¹ The order for detention in a reformatory school is not a sentence and the suspension of the sentence by the Sessions Judge will not prevent the carrying out of the detention.² As to power to act under S.31 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897, see the undermentioned decisions.³

5. "Instead of being imprisoned." — Since the detention is only instead of imprisonment in jail, the Court which sentences an accused person for any particular period of imprisonment cannot direct detention in a reformatory for a longer period.¹ Thus, where a confinement in a reformatory for one year was ordered on a sentence of imprisonment for one day the sentence was held illegal.² The period of detention should be defined and words like "or until he attains majority" should not be used.³ See also S. 8 of the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 and the undermentioned cases.⁴

6. Sub-section (3). — This section does not apply where the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 is in force.¹ In such cases the authority to send a youthful offender to a reformatory school must be found in that Act. Section 8 of that Act provides that only the Magistrates specified therein can make an order under this section.^{1a} A second class Magistrate who is not so specified cannot order a youthful offender to be sent to a reformatory school where the Reformatory Schools Act, 1897 is in force.² See also the undermentioned cases.³

1. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section does not disturb the conviction of an accused. It deals only with the power to suspend the execution of a sentence or remit the whole or any part of the punishment. The Provincial Government may act of its own accord (sub-section (1)),¹ or may be moved by an application (sub-section (2)). The Provincial Government has power under this section to suspend the execution of a death sentence to enable the accused to appeal to the Privy Council.² Though an order passed under this section by the Provincial Government is in the name of the Governor because that is the constitutional form it has to take, it is in reality an order of the Provincial Government.³

The special authority conferred by this section relates to persons sentenced to punishment and does not touch cases under S. 337 in which a person charged along with others with a crime has, under a conditionally tendered pardon, given evidence against such persons.⁴ The effect of an order of remission is to wipe out the remitted portion of the sentence altogether and not merely to suspend its operation.⁵

1a. Powers of Provincial Government — Sub-section (1).—Sub-section (1) of this section confers on the Provincial Government the power to suspend the execution of sentence or remit the whole or any part of the sentence with or without conditions. But where the Provincial Government has remitted a sentence unconditionally, it is not open to it to cancel the order and restore the sentence subsequently, except in cases of fraud or mistake. The general power of cancellation of orders under S. 21 of the General Clauses Act, 1897, cannot be invoked in such a case.¹

2. Statement of opinion of the presiding Judge — Sub-section (2).— On the receipt of an application the Provincial Government may require, from the presiding Judge of the Court before or by which the conviction was had or confirmed, a statement of his opinion with reasons and a certified copy of the available record. The object of calling for such a statement is to avoid a possible misapprehension about the legality of the sentence passed or a mistake as to the propriety of a particular punishment inflicted.¹ The Judge may also suo motu send his opinion whenever he considers that the prerogative of mercy should be exercised in favour of an accused. The following are instances where the Courts have thus recommended the accused to the mercy of the Government —

(3) of this section indicates that except where there is a breach of the conditions on which a sentence has been remitted, the Provincial Government cannot cancel the order of remission — Held further that in the circumstances of this case, the Provincial Government had lost its locus penitentiæ in the matter.)

- (1) discovery of facts after the final judgment is pronounced and signed, showing that the accused has committed no offence ;^{1a}
- (2) an oversight on the part of a counsel or omission on the part of the Court to notice a relevant fact in the proceedings resulting in an error of fact or law ;²
- (3) unsoundness of mind not strictly covered by S.84 of the Penal Code ;³ see also Note 3 under S. 376.

Note 2

It has been held that the Court ought not to express an opinion in a case where stay of execution of sentence is prayed for until a petition to His Majesty in Council is disposed of and that it is a matter which lies entirely with the Government.⁶ In the undermentioned case, where the accused were proved to be guilty of the grievous offence of waging war against the King, the Rangoon High Court refused to recommend the accused to mercy on the ground that the matter was entirely in the hands of Government.⁷

3. Procedure to be followed by the Court. — A Sessions Judge, required to state his opinion under this section, must forward his reply through the High Court whether the requisition for the opinion has been received through the High Court or not — Madras H. C. Cir. dated 15th November 1895.

When any Court shall be of opinion that there are grounds for recommending to the Provincial Government to exercise the powers vested in it by S. 401 and S. 402, of suspending, remitting or commuting the punishment to which any accused person has been sentenced, the recommendation shall be submitted with the proceedings in the case through the Court of the Judicial Commissioner — C. P. Criminal Circulars, Part II, No. 40.

All recommendations for remission or suspension of a sentence made under section 401 by an officer of any subordinate Court to the Provincial Government, in regard to a convict whose case has been before the High Court on appeal, shall be made through the High Court — Calcutta G. R. and C. O. P. 40.

4. Violation of condition of remission of punishment — Sub-section (3).—Section 227 of the Penal Code runs thus: "Whoever, having accepted any conditional remission of punishment, knowingly violates any condition on which such remission was granted, shall be punished with the punishment to which he was originally sentenced, if he has already suffered no part of that punishment, and if he has suffered any part of that punishment, then with so much of that punishment as he has not already suffered." Under this section it is for the Court to decide whether a conditionally released prisoner has violated the conditions on which the remission was granted.¹

5. "If at large." — Under S. 21 of the Prisoners Act of 1900, the Provincial Government may grant to any person under sentence of penal servitude a license to be at large within such part of the province and during such portion of his term of penal servitude as may be specified in the license and upon such conditions as the Provincial Government may, by general or special order, prescribe.

6. His Majesty's prerogative of pardon — Sub-section (5). — Primarily the power of pardon rests in the Sovereign; and the provisions contained in this section in no way interfere with the prerogative of the Crown in that respect.¹ The tendering of advice to His Majesty as to exercise of his prerogative of pardon is a matter for the Executive Government and is outside the province of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.²

of framing a charge for a particular offence.³ Further, the Magistrate should be careful not to mention anything in the charge in a form which is not justified by the materials before him.⁴

Section 210
Notes 6-12

Though a Magistrate is at liberty to frame a charge for any offence disclosed on the materials before him, he cannot frame a charge which would amount to his prejudging the case which has to be tried by another Court. Thus, where an accused was charged with the offence of wrongful confinement and he raised the defence that he had lawful excuse for his act because the person confined was caught in his house under circumstances which led to the belief that he had committed house-breaking by night, and the Magistrate committed the accused, not only for wrongful confinement but, disbelieving the defence, also for fabricating false evidence and making a false charge, it was held that the commitment in respect of the two last charges was illegal inasmuch as in putting the accused on his trial on such charges the Magistrate was really prejudging the defence which the accused had raised to the first charge.⁵

Where, under S. 423, the appellate Court directs a Magistrate to commit the accused for trial before the Court of Session, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to make further enquiry and the enquiry already held is sufficient for the purposes of this chapter. The Magistrate has then to frame a charge under this section and to proceed under Ss. 211 and 213 to commit the accused.⁶ See also S. 423 Note 30.

1. Scope of the section. — Certain accused persons were sentenced to death by a special Tribunal under Ordinance 3 of 1930. The execution of the sentence was stayed by the Provincial Government pending the decision of the Privy Council in the appeal against the sentence. Before the appeal was disposed of, the special Tribunal ceased to exist, and on the dismissal of the appeal it was contended that as the Tribunal ceased to exist and the time for execution had expired the custody of the prisoners was illegal. It was held that even if there was difficulty in carrying out the death sentence, still the Provincial Government could commute the sentence under this section.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.²

1. Scope of the section. — This section embodies the ancient maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa (no person should be twice disturbed for the same cause),¹ and provides that where a person has once been tried and convicted or acquitted of an offence he cannot again be tried for the same offence or for any other offence which is not distinct from the one previously tried. (See Note 2). It incorporates the common law principle of the well-known pleas of autrefois acquit (formerly acquitted) and autrefois convict (formerly convicted),² namely, that no one shall be punished or put in peril twice for the same matter.³ The principle does not rest on any doctrine of estoppel, but on grounds of public policy.⁴ There is nothing like res judicata in a criminal trial so long as it does not terminate in either acquittal or conviction so as to attract the provisions of this section. Hence the mere fact that a question was determined in a particular way in a prior proceeding against the accused will not preclude its being raised again.⁵

The provisions contained in this section are complete by themselves on the subject of the effect of previous acquittals or convictions.⁶

Even in cases in which a trial is not barred under this section, it has been held in a series of decisions,⁷ following Rex v. Plummer,⁸ that a judgment of acquittal fully establishes the innocence of the accused and that the fact of such innocence cannot be disputed in any subsequent proceedings. Thus, where A was acquitted of an offence and later on B was prosecuted under ss. 213 and 214, Penal Code, (concealing offence and screening offender) with reference to the same offence, it was held that the fact, established by the acquittal of A, viz., that no offence was committed by him, could not be disputed in the prosecution of B.⁹

2. In what cases fresh trial is barred. — The question in what cases a fresh trial is barred under this section and in what cases it is not, can best be discussed by reference to the following illustrative cases :—

- (1) A is tried for offence X and is convicted or acquitted. He is again sought to be tried for same offence X.
- (2) A is tried for offence X and is convicted or acquitted. He is again sought to be tried for offence Y, for which a charge might have been framed against him in the former trial, under s. 236 of the Code or of which he might have been convicted under s. 237 of the Code.
- (3) A is tried for offence X and is convicted or acquitted. He is again sought to be tried for offence Y. X and Y are distinct offences forming parts of the same transaction but not falling within s. 236 or s. 237 of the Code.

- (4) A is tried for offence X and is convicted or acquitted. He is again sought to be tried for offence Y. X and Y are "distinct" offences forming separate transactions.
- (5) A is tried for offence X. He is again sought to be tried for offence Y. X and Y are not distinct offences and do not fall within ss. 236 and 237 of the Code, but form part of the same transaction.

In cases 1 and 2 the subsequent trial is barred under sub-s. (1) of the section.¹ Sub-section (2) provides that in case 3 the subsequent trial is not barred. Case 4 does not fall either under sub-s. (1) or sub-s. (2). The subsequent trial is, however, obviously not barred. The reason is that if a subsequent trial for a distinct offence forming part of the same transaction, is not barred, a subsequent trial for a distinct offence not forming part of the same transaction cannot be barred.

Case 5 is not within sub-s. (1) of the section. Sub-section (2) also does not in terms apply to it; but it implies that a subsequent trial is barred, and decisions which have held that a subsequent trial in such cases is barred can only be supported in this view.² Thus, where A gives Z fifty strokes with a stick, each stroke is a different offence, but all the strokes form part of the same transaction. The offences are, however, not distinct and a conviction or acquittal in respect of one such stroke would operate as a bar to a subsequent trial for other strokes.

From the above discussion, it will be clear that a subsequent trial of an accused person in regard to an affair will be barred in the following cases :—

- (1) Where the offence subsequently charged is the same as the one previously tried.

Section 403
Notes 2-3

- (2) Where the offence subsequently charged is one for which a charge might have been framed under S. 236 or of which the accused might have been convicted under S. 237 at the previous trial.
- (3) Where the offence subsequently charged is not distinct from the one previously tried (except in cases coming under sub-ss. (3) and (4)). A second trial will not be barred in any other case, although the offence subsequently charged may have been committed in the course of the same transaction as the one previously tried.³

Further, even with regard to offences which are not distinct, a second trial will not be barred in cases coming under sub-ss. (3) and (4) of this section.

As to the meaning of the words "same offence" and "distinct offences," see Notes 3 and 5.

Even in cases in which a fresh trial may not be barred under this section, the Court may refuse to proceed against a person on the ground that it is not desirable or proper in the circumstances of a particular case to prosecute a person for a second time on the same facts.⁴

3. "Same offence." — The word "offence" has been defined in s. 4 (1) clause (o) as any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. That definition applies, however, where a different intention does not appear from the subject or context. Sub-section (4) of this section shows that the same act may constitute different offences. The words "same offence" in this section, therefore, must be taken to mean the same act or omission made punishable under the same provision of law. Where an act or omission is punishable under different provisions of law, the person committing it cannot be said to "commit the same offence" within the meaning of this sub-section.¹ Hence, the expressions "same offence" and "same act or omission" cannot be treated as inter-changeable. The judgment in the undermentioned case² is, it is submitted, not correct in this respect.

The view has sometimes been expressed³ that the words "same offence" in sub-s. (1) refer to the same transaction. It is submitted that such an interpretation is too broad. Sub-sections (2) to (4) show that though the transaction may be the same the offences involved may be different.

4. Any other offence for which a different charge might have been made under section 236. — The expression "might have been made" means "might have been lawfully made."¹ As to when a charge may be framed under S. 236, see Notes to S. 236. See also the cases cited below.²

5. "Any distinct offence." — Before the amendment of 1923, S. 35 of the Code provided that where at one trial, a person was convicted of two or more distinct offences the Court may sentence him to the several punishments prescribed therefor. An Explanation to the section provided that separable offences within the meaning of S. 71 of the Penal Code were not distinct offences within the meaning of that section. Separate offences not falling within S. 71 of the Penal Code, were, therefore, distinct offences. The word "distinct" which had been used in this section also even before 1923 continues to exist even now in this section, though by the amendment of 1923, it has been deleted in S. 35. But the test to determine whether the offences charged at two trials are distinct for purposes of this section would be the same, namely, whether, if the offences were charged at the same trial, separate sentences could be passed in respect thereof under S. 71 of the Penal Code.¹ Hence, the following considerations based on S. 71 of the Penal Code may be applied in determining whether two offences are distinct:—

- (1) Where the offences are constituted by the same acts or omissions they are not distinct.² See also Note 6.

Illustrations

(a) A person who has been tried for an offence under S. 202 of the Penal Code, cannot be tried again, on the same facts, for an offence under S. 176 of the Penal Code because the offences under the two sections would be constituted by the same acts.³

(b) A person who is acquitted of the offence of disorderly behaviour on a public thoroughfare under a Police Act [for example, the Rangoon Police Act, S. 41, sub-s.(16)] cannot again be tried under the Penal Code for rioting where the same acts constitute both the offences.⁴

(c) An acquittal of a person under S. 211 of the Penal Code, would bar his trial again on the same facts for an offence under S. 182 of the Penal Code.⁵

(d) A person tried under S. 353 of the Penal Code cannot again be tried in respect of the same act under S. 186 of the Penal Code.⁶

Notes 1a-1

(2) The Magistrate may, in his discretion, allow the accused to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time; and, where the accused is committed for trial before the High Court, nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude the accused from giving, at any time before his trial, to the Clerk of the Crown a further list of the persons whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on such trial.

1a. Object of the section. — The purpose of this section is merely that executive authorities should be able to compel the attendance of such witnesses as the accused wishes to be summoned in order that when the trial of the case comes on in the Sessions Court, the case may be heard from day to day and no time should be wasted. Under s. 291 the accused can examine witnesses who are present in Court although they were not previously named by him.¹

1. "The accused shall be required." — After the charge framed against the accused has been read and explained to him under s. 210, sub-s.(2) above, the Magistrate is bound under this section to require the accused to give in a list of witnesses, if any, whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial in the Court of Session.¹ The accused must be clearly and specifically asked for a list of witnesses. It is not enough to put the question "Have you any evidence?" Such a question is ambiguous and might suggest to the accused, only an inquiry as to whether he has witnesses ready in Court.²

The language of the section is imperative, and a failure to ask an accused person to give in his list of witnesses will render his conviction liable to be quashed, even though he has been tried along with others, who had been so asked.³

It is also necessary that the names of witnesses for the defence must appear on the record. Where a Magistrate omits to enter the

- (2) Where anything which is an offence consists of parts, any of which parts is itself an offence, the offences are not distinct. Thus, where a person receives or retains different items of stolen property at the same time, he does not commit so many distinct offences.⁹ See also the case cited below.¹⁰ In this view, the undermentioned decision¹¹ must be deemed incorrect.
- (3) Where several acts, of which one or more than one, would, by itself, or by themselves, constitute an offence, constitute, when combined, a different offence, the offences are not distinct.¹² Thus, A is a member of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which is to cause hurt to B. In pursuance of the common object, A causes hurt to B. In such a case, the act of being a member of an unlawful assembly, and that of causing hurt constitute offences in themselves under Ss. 143 and 323 of the Penal Code respectively,

It has sometimes been said¹⁵ that the test for determining, whether an offence is distinct from one previously tried, is to see whether the evidence necessary to prove the two offences is the same or different. It is submitted that such a test is not conclusive¹⁶ as it is possible that though the evidence necessary to prove two offences is different, the offences may not be distinct.

Further, the observation in the undermentioned case¹⁷ that, in order to constitute distinct offences, the offences must be totally unconnected, is not correct, as the same transaction may involve distinct offences, in which case they cannot be said to be totally unconnected.

But a fresh trial will not be competent if the death had occurred, and was known to the Court to have occurred, at the time of the previous conviction.³ The reason is that sub-s.(3) will not apply to such a case while at the same time, the offences charged at the two trials would be constituted by the same acts and as such would not be distinct offences. See Notes 2 and 5.

section 494 of the Code.^{4a}

Security proceedings⁵ or proceedings under section 145⁶ do not constitute a trial within the meaning of this section. Similarly, a proceeding for maintenance under S. 488 of the Code is not a trial and a prior application for maintenance does not bar a fresh application. But where a Magistrate knows or has reason to believe that a prior application has been made and disposed of, he ought not to act on a later application without taking into consideration the adjudication on the prior application. See S. 488 Note 28a.

Disciplinary proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act are not trials.⁷ But the Rangoon High Court has held that such proceedings are quasi criminal and that the principle of this section will apply to them.⁸

Where in a sessions trial in a High Court the jury is discharged on a difference of opinion between the Judge and the jury and the case is retried with a new jury, there is no fresh trial, for the purpose of this section.⁹ It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that the retrial of an accused on remand owing to misdirection to the jury is part of the same trial which is not concluded till the appeal is heard and determined.¹⁰ Similarly, an appeal is not a fresh trial but only a continuation of the trial in the lower Court.¹¹

This section does not say that a person who has been tried and convicted or acquitted shall be acquitted if an attempt is made to prosecute him again for the same offence. It says that he shall not be tried at all.¹² Therefore the acquittal of a person on the ground of his trial being barred under this section is illegal, the reason being that names of witnesses for the defence on the record and the omission is brought to the notice of the Sessions Judge, he ought not to try the accused, in the absence of such witnesses.⁴

Section 211

2. "At once."—The list of witnesses should be presented as soon as the charge has been framed.¹ The view taken in the undermentioned decision² that it is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses on the day when the order of commitment is made is, it is submitted, incorrect.

3. Right of accused filing the list — Enforcement of attendance of witnesses. — The accused is entitled, as a matter of right, to have the witnesses named by him in the list, summoned and examined on his behalf at the trial.¹ In the event of the witnesses ignoring or not complying with the summons, the accused is entitled to have their attendance enforced² and the Crown is charged with the duty of securing their attendance.³ The examination of such witnesses cannot be refused on the ground that it would be inconvenient to adjourn the case in order to secure their attendance.⁴ When some of the witnesses named in the list given by the accused do not appear, an application for enforcing their attendance should not be refused, though made when the case is ready for arguments.⁵ A conviction will not, however, be set aside on the ground that the attendance of some of the witnesses was not enforced unless the accused has been thereby prejudiced.⁶

4. Refusal of Magistrate to summon witnesses. — A Magistrate may, under the second proviso to S. 216, refuse to summon any witness mentioned in the list on the ground that such witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice. He cannot, however, refuse to summon a witness on the ground that he is suspected to be implicated in the offence with

*Emperor*⁴ had taken a contrary view, holding that the words "competent jurisdiction" refer only to the character and status of a Court and not to conditions precedent for the prosecution or trial of a person. The question again arose for consideration before a Full Bench of the same High Court. After referring to the conflict of decisions on the point, King J., with whom the other Judges agreed, thought it unnecessary to come to any final conclusion on the meaning of the word "competent" and held that the trial without a proper complaint was void under S. 530 and, therefore, the judgment of acquittal was also void and so there was nothing which the accused could compel the Court to recognize in support of a plea of autrefois acquit.⁵ The Calcutta High

It has been held by the High Court of Bombay that a Court having no local jurisdiction to try a case is not a Court of competent jurisdiction and a conviction or acquittal by such Court will be no bar to a fresh trial of the accused on the same facts.⁷ But a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has dissented from the Bombay High Court and held that an accused person can plead autrefois acquit if the only defect in the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the order is want of territorial jurisdiction and that s. 531 applies to such cases.⁸ The Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁹ has followed the Madras view in preference to that of the Bombay High Court. It is submitted that the Madras view is correct. See S. 531 Note 4.

Where the previous trial was by a Court of Session with the aid of assessors and the offence subsequently charged was triable by jury, it was held that it could not be said that the Court by which the accused was first tried was not competent to try the offence subsequently charged.¹⁰

A conviction or acquittal by a Court established under a local or special law is a conviction or acquittal by a Court of competent jurisdiction within the meaning of this section.¹¹

It has been held that a conviction by a Court in a Native State can be pleaded as a bar under this section.¹²

An illegal conviction is not the same thing as a conviction by a Court having no jurisdiction.¹³

12. Identity of accused necessary for application of section.

— This section will preclude a fresh trial only if the accused in the second case is the same as the accused in the previous case. The conviction or acquittal of an accused person is, therefore, no bar to the trial of another person implicated in the same offence.¹ But in determining the question whether there is sufficient ground for proceeding against a person, the fact that another person accused of the same offence and on the same facts has been acquitted may be taken into consideration.²

13. Dismissal of complaint or discharge of accused. — The explanation to the section expressly provides that the dismissal of a complaint or the discharge of an accused is not an acquittal for the purposes of the section. The question has arisen whether notwithstanding this, the provision of a special remedy in such cases under S. 436 and S. 437 impliedly bars the institution of a fresh prosecution for the same offence where the order dismissing the complaint or discharging the accused has not been set aside by a competent authority. It is well settled now that a fresh prosecution is not barred in such cases.¹ The contrary view taken in some of the earlier decisions² is, it is submitted, not good law.

Where a complaint is dismissed or an accused is discharged by one Magistrate, there is a conflict of decisions as to whether another Magistrate of co-ordinate or inferior jurisdiction can start a fresh prosecution against the accused for the same offence. It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay,³ Madras,⁴ Rangoon⁵ and the Chief Court of the Punjab,⁶ that a fresh prosecution can be started by such Magistrate. A contrary view is held by the High Courts of Allahabad⁷ and Calcutta⁸ and by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁹ on the ground that it would be contrary to sound principle to allow one Magistrate to practically displace the orders of another Magistrate of equal rank and powers. It is submitted that there is no warrant for limiting the effect of the words of the explanation in this way. It has also been held by a Full Bench of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court that where a complaint has been dismissed for default, there is no bar to the entertainment of a fresh complaint by the same Magistrate or by his successor in office or by some other Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction.¹⁰

It is settled that the successor of the Magistrate by whom a complaint was dismissed or an accused was discharged can start proceedings against the accused afresh.¹¹ See also S. 559.

Whether it is the same Magistrate or a different Magistrate before whom proceedings against an accused are sought to be re-commenced, the Magistrate has a discretion in the matter;¹² he ought not to start a fresh prosecution in the absence of exceptional circumstances.¹³ which the accused is charged¹ or that the Magistrate entertains doubts as to the value of the evidence of such witness² or that the list contains a large number of witnesses.³ Where a further list is given under sub-s.(2), subsequent to the order of commitment, the Magistrate is bound, on receipt of such list, to exercise his discretion and state distinctly whether he would summon the witnesses or not. If he is of opinion that any witness is included in the list for the purpose of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice, the Magistrate ought to proceed under the second proviso to s. 216.⁴

5. Reserving of defence by the accused. — Though the language of the section is imperative, there is nothing in it which enables the Magistrate to prevent the accused person from reserving his defence for the Court of Session.¹ As a matter of fact, the accused is entitled to reserve his defence, and refuse to disclose the names of witnesses whom he intends to call at the trial.² Thus, where an accused on being asked to give a list of witnesses, does not give it, but says he will file a list subsequently, the Magistrate would be acting with sound judicial judgment and in accordance with law, if he does not cross-examine the accused as to the names of his witnesses and what those witnesses would be called to prove.³ This is because there may be the danger, in some cases, of the accused running the risk of his witnesses being tampered with. In such a case, it will be wise on the part of the accused to decline to give a list to the Magistrate, and to reserve his defence for the Court of Session.⁴

But an accused person, who has reserved his defence, cannot claim to keep back any of his witnesses mentioned in the list from being examined by the Magistrate under s. 212, on the ground that his right of reserving the defence would be prejudicially affected thereby.⁵

6. Failure of the accused to give a list — Effect of. — If an accused person, on being asked by the Magistrate to give in a list of his witnesses, declines to give in such a list, he cannot compel the Magistrate, after committal, to issue summonses for witnesses on his behalf. He is, however, entitled under s. 291 to call any witness in the Court of Session and examine him, if he is in attendance in such Court, whether or not, he has caused such witness to be summoned.¹ In such

15. General Clauses Act, Section 26. — Sub-section (5) of this section provides inter alia that nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of S. 26 of the General Clauses Act. That section runs as follows :

“Where an act or omission constitutes an offence under two or more enactments, then the offender shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of those enactments, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence.”

The effect of this is not to authorise or prohibit a second prosecution of a person in any case. The section only means that at one and the same trial a person may be charged under the different enactments under which his act may be punishable provided that he is not punished twice for such act.¹ (Compare S. 235, sub-s.(2) of this Code and S. 71 of the Penal Code.)

1. (‘03) 6 Oudh Cas 153 (157), Raghubar Dayal v. King-Emperor.

It is submitted that the following decisions which have proceeded on the footing that the question of a subsequent trial being barred or not may come within the purview of S. 26, General Clauses Act, have not approached the question from the correct point of view :

(‘35) AIR 1935 Pesh 18 (19) : 36 Cri L Jour 813, Arsala Khan v. Emperor.

The effect of sub-s. (5) is to enact that the above provision which enables a person being proceeded against at the same trial under different enactments in regard to the same act is not affected by the prohibition of a fresh trial in respect of such act which this section contains.

15a. Section 188 of the Code. — Sub-section (5) of this section provides inter alia that nothing in this section shall affect the provisions of S.188 of the Code. The second proviso to that section provides that the trial of a person under the section in British India for an offence committed out of British India will preclude extradition proceedings being taken against him for the same offence. This section precludes only a fresh trial of a person on the same facts in the circumstances stated in the section. The object of this sub-section is to provide that the fact that only a fresh trial is barred under this section does not affect the bar of extradition of proceedings created by section 188.

16. Practice. — A plea of bar under this section can be raised at any stage of the case.¹ The plea can be raised even in revision,² though the proper time to take it is when the accused is called upon to plead.^{2a} The burden of proving the facts necessary to establish the plea is on the accused.³ When a plea of bar is raised under this section, it must be determined after hearing the evidence and ascertaining what the facts are in the two cases.⁴ It cannot be constructively decided.⁵

person cannot be taken away by transfer.⁷

A right of appeal has been given not only by Ss. 405 to 418 of this chapter but also by other sections of the Code. See Ss. 250, 486, 515 and 524. The procedure to be adopted in all such appeals under the Code is that prescribed by this chapter (Ss. 419 to 431)⁸ unless any of the provisions thereof specifically restrict the application of such provisions to appeals under this chapter. Thus, S. 428 applies only to appeals under this chapter; it consequently does not apply to appeals under section 476B.⁹

The section refers to criminal Courts. It does not, however, follow from this that the Code deals only with the appeals from criminal Courts. Sections 476B and 486 deal with orders passed by any civil or revenue Courts. Appeals in respect of orders from such Courts are specially provided for in those sections. As to the procedure applicable to such appeals, see Ss. 195 and 476 and the undermentioned cases.¹⁰

The words judgment, order, conviction and sentence are not used in a consistent sense in this chapter, with the result that a clear and consistent scheme as to appeals cannot be evolved from the chapter.¹¹

The term "order" in this section means a final order. An interlocutory order is thus not open to appeal.¹² See also Note 7 to S. 417.

An appeal is only a continuation of the trial¹³ and consequently the appellate Court, unless otherwise provided, has powers to do only what the lower Court could do and should have done and not to pass any order under any circumstances.¹⁴

The general tendency of the Amending Act of 1923 is to enlarge rather than curtail the right of appeal.¹⁵

Section 404 Notes 1-1a

1a. Forum of appeal. — Under ss. 407, 408, 410 and 411, the forum of an appeal is dependent on the status of the Judge by whom the trial is held. Suppose there is a change in the status of the Judge after the hearing of a case and before judgment is given: Is the forum of appeal to be determined by the Judge's status at the time of the hearing or at the time of the judgment? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. According to the Allahabad High Court,¹ the judgment does not form part of a trial under the Code and hence the Judge's status at the time of the hearing and not at the time of the judgment determines the forum of appeal. The Calcutta High Court also holds the same view.² But the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that the status of the Judge at the time of the judgment determines the forum of appeal.³ The decision proceeds on the ground that as under this section an appeal lies from a judgment or order and not from a trial, it is the Judge's status at the time of the judgment that determines the forum of the appeal. But with regard to this point, the Allahabad High Court thinks that this section only indicates that an appeal is to lie from a judgment or order and has nothing to do with the forum of an appeal.⁴

They have, therefore, to satisfy themselves whether the case falls within the limits prescribed by the Privy Council for the entertainment of appeals in criminal matters.⁴ The Privy Council may also grant special leave in special cases.⁵ In any case, the Privy Council will not interfere with the course of criminal proceedings in British India unless it is shown that, by a disregard of the forms of legal process, or by some violation of the principles of natural justice, or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done.⁶

a case, if the accused applies to the Sessions Court for issue of summons to any witness, he is not entitled to the issue of such summons. But the Sessions Court has a discretion to issue summons in such a case and where the Sessions Court considers that the evidence of a witness would be material, it is the duty of the Sessions Court to issue summons to such witness.²

Where an accused person gives no list of witnesses to the committing Magistrate and applies, at a late stage of the trial in the Sessions Court, for an adjournment thereof in order to procure the attendance of witnesses for his defence, it would be perfectly legal for the Court to refuse the application.³ See also S. 291 and the Notes thereto.

7. Further list. — It has been seen that for an accused to have his witnesses summoned as of right, he must give in a list under this section. Where he does not give in his list immediately after the charge is framed, the Magistrate has a discretion to accept a list subsequently.¹ When a further list has been allowed to be filed by the Magistrate under sub-s.(2), it is governed by the same principles, as a list under sub-s.(1).²

An accused committed for trial before a High Court is entitled under sub-s.(2) to give to the Clerk of the Crown, at any time before his trial, a further list of witnesses for his defence.

2a. Appeal to Federal Court.—The word "judgment" in S. 205 of the Government of India Act, 1935, is comprehensive enough to include a judgment in a criminal case.¹ Hence, the Federal Court has jurisdiction in criminal as well as in civil cases.² An appeal will, therefore, lie to the Federal Court from the decision of a High Court in a criminal case.

If the right is created by a rule of the Government, such a rule must not be ultra vires of the statute conferring the rule-making power.¹ An order may be that of a criminal Court; yet there will be no appeal unless one is provided for by the statute.² There is no right of appeal when a special or

1. Legislative changes. — The Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923, by which this section was substituted for the old S. 406 has introduced the following changes in the law :

- (1) Under the old section there was no right of appeal in cases of orders under S. 118 read with S. 107, i. e. orders for security for keeping the peace.¹ The present section has conferred this right.
- (2) Even in respect of orders in good behaviour cases, there was no right of appeal from the orders of the District Magistrate or the Presidency Magistrate.² Under the present section appeals are provided from such orders to the Court of Session and the High Court.

Notes 1-2

- (3) Whereas under the old section appeals lay only to the District Magistrate, the present section provides appeals to Courts of Session and the High Court except where there is a Government Notification under the first proviso to the section. See Note 2 below.
- (4) The law has been made clear as to appeals in cases where proceedings are laid before a Sessions Judge under S. 123 of the Code. See Note 4 below.

2. Scope of the section. — The present section, while extending the right of appeal to orders for security for keeping the peace, confines the right only to such orders as fall under S. 118. In other words, an order under S. 106 as it is not covered by the terms of S. 118 read with S. 112 still remains non-appealable.¹ See S. 106, Note 23.

The jurisdiction to hear appeals in security cases which was vested only in the District Magistrate is now vested in the Sessions Judge and the High Court ordinarily. But power has been given to the Provincial Government by the first proviso to the section to direct that in any particular district notified in the official Gazette, appeals from subordinate Magistrates shall lie to the District Magistrate.² Before the amendment of the section, appeals from the orders of an Additional District Magistrate also lay to the District Magistrate as the former was held not to be a District Magistrate under S. 406.³ The same would appear to be the law under the present section in cases covered by the first proviso thereof.⁴

When a special or local Act empowers a Magistrate to proceed under the security sections of chapter VIII of the Code in respect of persons specified in the Act, an order by the Magistrate for furnishing security is one under S. 118 of the Code, and S. 406 applies to such an order.⁵

The Code does not confer a right of appeal from an order of imprisonment in default of furnishing security passed under S. 123.⁶

3. Hearing of security appeals. — An appeal from an order requiring a person to furnish security to be of good behaviour or to keep the peace is distinguishable from an appeal against a conviction in respect of an offence specifically charged, where the only matter for consideration may be the credibility or otherwise of certain direct and positive evidence.¹ In appeals of the former class, it is not unreasonable to insist that the appeal should not be disposed of in a summary manner but by a judgment showing on the face of it that the Judge has applied his mind to a consideration of the evidence on the record and of the pleas raised by the appellant.^{1a}

As to whether an appellate Court hearing appeals under S. 406 has the power to order retrial, see S. 423, Note 34. An appellate Court can modify or alter the bond in appeal under clause (c) to S. 423.² It has, however, been held by the Oudh Chief Court that the appellate Court cannot enhance the amount of security demanded by the trial Court.³ But it has been held by the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind that an appellate Court has power to extend the period during which security is required to be furnished and thereby extend the period of imprisonment to be suffered in default although power should be exercised only in exceptional circumstances.⁴

4. Second proviso. — Under sub-s. (2) to S. 123 of the Code, where a person has been ordered to give security for a period exceeding one year and does not give such security, the Magistrate (other than a Presidency Magistrate) is bound to lay the proceedings before the

Note 4

Sessions Judge for orders. Notwithstanding such reference to the Sessions Judge an appeal from the order of the Magistrate as such lay as a matter of right to the District Magistrate under the terms of S. 406 as it stood before the amendment of 1923. Two different Courts were thus likely to be in seisin of the same matter at the same time and this state of the law gave rise to conflict of procedure. Under the circumstances the High Courts tried to lay down complex rules of procedure to mitigate the anomalies. It was held that the Sessions Judge should proceed to decide the case under reference before him only on satisfying himself that no appeal had been preferred and in case an appeal had been filed should stay his hand till the disposal of the appeal and that the right of appeal under S. 406 was lost as soon as the Sessions Judge passed orders under S. 123.¹ It was sometimes held that an appeal under S. 406 was meant only for cases in which there was no necessity to lay the proceedings before the Sessions Judge.² The present section, by enacting the second proviso, has removed the right of appeal in such cases and simplified the law.³ The right of appeal is, however, revived, if pending disposal of the reference, security is offered and accepted, inasmuch as the acceptance of the security has the effect of automatically terminating the reference.⁴ But it may be noted that the said proviso affects only cases of reference by the Magistrate to the Sessions Judge and has no application to cases laid before the High Court by a Presidency Magistrate under S. 123.

An order passed by a Sessions Judge on reference under S. 123 is not an order of the Magistrate and therefore continues to be non-appellable under section 406.⁵

1. "Convicted on a trial."—Section 4 of the Code of 1872 defined "trial" as the proceedings taken in Court after a charge has been drawn up and as including the punishment of an offence. Subsequent Codes have not defined the term 'trial' as such; but in S. 4 of the present Code the term is distinguished as being different from an "inquiry" under the Code. A "trial" under the Code would imply the proceedings in which a person stands before a Court empowered to convict him of some 'offences' alleged against him.¹ The essentials of a trial are thus the charge of an "offence" and the power in the Court to "convict" the offender for the offence. The term "conviction" denotes the finding of guilty as distinguished from an acquittal or discharge on a finding of not guilty. On a conviction a sentence will follow in the usual course except as otherwise provided by the Code, as for example, in S. 562. The expression "convicted on a trial" has thus sole reference to cases in which an accused has been held guilty of an offence.² See the language of Ss. 243, 258, 262 (2), 306 (2), 307 (2) and (3) and 367.

It follows that a decision in which an offence is not involved is not a conviction on a trial. Before the change introduced in 1898 in S. 4 (1) (o), an illegal seizure of cattle did not amount to an 'offence' and an order under the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, for compensation for illegal seizure was held not to amount to a conviction on trial and not appealable.³ Such an order now amounts to a "conviction on a trial" and is appealable.⁴ An order under S. 488 of this Code directing payment of a monthly allowance in default of maintenance is not a "conviction on a trial."⁵ So also, an order under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act for refund of the amount of advance⁶ or an order imposing a penalty and inflicting a sentence of imprisonment⁷ or to perform a contract under the said Act,⁸ or forfeiting the security furnished under chapter VIII,⁹ is not an order of "conviction on a trial."

The appeal being from a conviction, the absence of a sentence, as in cases falling under S. 562, is no bar to an appeal¹⁰ nor will an appeal lie against the sentence alone except in cases provided for in S. 412 of the Code.¹¹

2. Trial held by a second class Magistrate.—According to the wording of S. 407, it is not the conviction by a second class Magistrate but the holding of a trial by such Magistrate that determines the forum of the appeal.¹ Where a second class Magistrate in the course of the proceedings in the same case is invested with first class powers, the question arises whether the appeal lies to the District Magistrate under the section or to the Court of Session. Where the trial was

1. Scope of the section. — The object of the section is twofold: firstly to prevent any hasty commitment and to ensure a thorough enquiry previous to the commitment¹ and, secondly, to prevent the concoction of false evidence after the commitment.² In order to achieve this object, the section gives the Magistrate the widest possible discretion to summon and examine any witness named in the list given by the accused under S. 211. Thus, he may summon and examine the witnesses for the defence even when the accused has reserved his defence for the Court of Session.³ The discretion thus vested entitles the Magistrate to ascertain, after weighing the evidence,⁴ whether there is a presumption of guilt against the accused or whether he is innocent,⁵ for it is possible that after hearing the witnesses for the defence the enquiry may result in the discharge of the accused under S. 213, sub-s.(2).⁶ But this discretion has to be exercised sparingly and cautiously as any inconsiderate or premature examination of witnesses may prejudice the accused in his defence at the trial in the Sessions Court.⁷

The accused has no right to have his witnesses summoned and examined after the charge is framed under S. 210.⁸ And a Magistrate is not required to record his reasons for acting or refusing to act under this section.⁹

213.* (1) When the accused, on being required to give in a list under section 211, has declined to do so, or when he has given in such list and the witnesses (if any)

Order of commitment.

213. When the accused, on being required to give in a list under S. 211, has declined to do so, or when he has given in such list, and the witnesses (if any) included therein whom the Magistrate desires to examine have been summoned and examined under S. 212, the Magistrate may make an order committing the accused for trial by the High Court or the Court of Session (as the case may be), and (unless the Magistrate is a Presidency Magistrate) shall also record briefly the reasons for such commitment.

completely held by the Magistrate as a second class Magistrate but the higher powers were conferred only at the time of the judgment, there is no doubt that the appeal lies to the District Magistrate.² Similarly, where most part of the trial is held by the Magistrate as a first class Magistrate, as for example, when, after examining eight prosecution witnesses as second class Magistrate, two more prosecution witnesses are examined and charge framed and the case concluded as a first class Magistrate, the appeal lies to the Court of Session.³ Also, in cases where only a small part of the trial is held by the Magistrate as a first class Magistrate,⁴ the appeal has been held to lie to the Court of Session, apparently on the ground that if any part of the trial is held by the Magistrate as a Magistrate of the first class and the case has been concluded by him, it must be considered to be a trial held by a Magistrate of the first class. The Madras High Court in Venkatareddi v. Ramayya,⁵ seems to be of the opinion that a conviction by a first class Magistrate and not the trial is the determining factor. It is submitted this is against the current of authority in India. See also S. 39 Note 2 and S. 410 Note 2.

Where a second class Magistrate submits a case under S. 349 to a first class Magistrate, an appeal from the sentence of the first class Magistrate falls under S. 403 and not under this section, although the first class Magistrate passes his sentence without taking further evidence and so the trial should be considered to have been held by the second class Magistrate.⁶

3. Appeals from the Bench of Magistrates of the second class. — Where a trial Bench is composed of Magistrates of the second class but is invested, as a Bench with first class powers, appeals from the decisions of the Bench lie to the Sessions Judge and not to the District Magistrate.¹

as lie to him "under this section," that is to say, appeals from convictions. He cannot transfer any other class of appeals from his Court under this sub-section.^{1a} Nor will the power to hear appeals on transfer render the Court of the first class Magistrate, the Court to which appeals "ordinarily lie" within the meaning of S. 195 (3). The Court of the District Magistrate will continue to be such Court notwithstanding that appeals under S. 407 may be presented to a subordinate Magistrate's Court under the sub-section.²

The power of withdrawal of appeals vested in the District Magistrate can be exercised at any time even though an appeal may be part-heard before the subordinate Magistrate.³ Once an appeal is withdrawn the District Magistrate becomes solely responsible for the disposal of the appeal and he is not bound by any opinion formed or recorded by the subordinate Magistrate prior to the withdrawal as to the necessity of examining further evidence in the case.⁴

4. Sentence under section 349. — In a case submitted by an inferior Magistrate under S. 349 for severer punishment, the District Magistrate or the sub-divisional Magistrate to whom it is submitted, cannot pass a higher sentence than he is empowered to inflict under ss. 32 and 33.¹ See proviso to sub-s.(2) of S. 349. Again, S. 30 authorizes the Provincial Government to empower the District Magistrate or any Magistrate of the first class to try, as a Magistrate, all offences not punishable with death. Now, suppose the Magistrate to whom proceedings are submitted under S. 349 is a Magistrate empowered under S. 30, can he pass a sentence more severe than he is empowered to inflict under ss. 32 and 33? It has been held that he cannot do so, that in such a case the said proviso to S. 349 will prevail and that even should the Magistrate sentence him to imprisonment for a term exceeding four years, the appeal will lie not to the High Court under proviso (b) to S. 408, but only to the Court of Session.²

5. Order or sentence under section 380.—The amendment of 1923 making an order or sentence under S. 380 appealable to the Court of Session has given legislative sanction to the view expressed to that effect in the undermentioned case.¹

6. Court of Session. — Where, in a district there are two sessions divisions, an appeal from a conviction by a Magistrate having jurisdiction over the whole district lies to the Sessions Judge of the division within which the headquarters of the Magistrate are situate, irrespective of the place of offence.¹

In Agency Tracts to which the Code of Criminal Procedure is extended, an appeal from the Agency Magistrate of the first class lies to the Sessions Judge of the Agency Tracts and not to the non-agency Sessions Judge.²

Where an Assistant Sessions Judge convicts and sentences an accused for a term less than four years, an appeal lies only to the Court of Session and the fact that at the time of the appeal the Assistant Sessions Judge himself became the Sessions Judge will not give a right of appeal to the High Court.⁷

Where a District Magistrate, appointed as a special officer to try a criminal case in a Native State, convicts and sentences the accused for the term mentioned in proviso (b), no appeal will lie to the High Court as he did not act as a Magistrate of the first class under the Code.⁸

An order of detention in Borstal School is not a sentence of imprisonment within the meaning of this proviso.⁹

For "concurrent sentences," see Note 8 below.

8. Concurrent sentences. — In a trial for more offences than one the aggregate of sentences if they are consecutive must be deemed as one sentence for purposes of an appeal.¹ See also S. 35 Note 16.

9. Proviso (c). — Under this proviso, when a person is convicted by a Magistrate of an offence under S. 124A, Penal Code, the appeal lies to the High Court and not to the Sessions Court. The Sessions Judge entertaining such an appeal acts without jurisdiction.¹

Where in a single trial an accused person is convicted under S. 124A of the Penal Code, and also under S. 153A of that Code, the aggregate of sentences must be deemed as one sentence for purposes of appeal under S. 35, sub-s.(3) of the Code; the forum for appeal is the High Court.²

Sessions Judge, acting under S. 428, causes additional evidence to be taken in an appeal and then convicts the accused, the latter is not convicted on a trial held by a Sessions Judge and no appeal lies to the High Court.³

A Judge of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind sitting in a Sessions trial is a Sessions Judge for the purposes of this section.⁴ The High Court of Bombay has power to hear appeals from a conviction by the Agent of Mewar, under the special jurisdiction conferred on the said High Court by Rule 44 of the Bombay Act, II of 1846.⁵ The High Court of Calcutta has no jurisdiction to hear appeals from Chittagong Hill Tracts, as those tracts have been removed from the operation of the existing civil and criminal jurisdiction.⁶

For the meaning of 'High Court' in regard to appeals by European British subjects, see section 4 (1) (j) of the Code.⁷

Where a case has been submitted to the High Court under S. 374 for confirmation and the High Court has pronounced a decision thereon, no appeal is open to the accused subsequently from the order of the Sessions Judge.⁸

1. Appeal from Presidency Magistrate. — The imprisonment for a term exceeding six months in this section has reference only to the substantive term of imprisonment, and does not include the imprisonment which may be contingent on default of payment of fine.¹ A substantive sentence of imprisonment for a term of six months cannot, therefore, be combined with any term of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of fine for claiming a right of appeal.² Where the sentence does not contain any one of the punishments specified in the section, no appeal lies.³ Concurrent sentences against the accused in the same trial cannot be aggregated to bring the case under the section.⁴

In a case where a Presidency Magistrate proceeds under S. 562 and passes an order for release of the accused on furnishing security for good behaviour thereunder, the question arises whether an appeal lies from such an order. It has been seen in Note 1 to S. 407 that the absence of a sentence is no bar to an appeal from a conviction which underlies an order under S. 562. But under the strict terms of S. 411 no appeal can lie from a conviction by a Presidency Magistrate unless it is accompanied by one or the other of the sentences specified in the section. The answer, therefore, in the case under consideration is that no appeal lies.⁵

Where the sentence, one of imprisonment, is within the appealable limit, an appeal lies although the offender is ordered to be confined in a juvenile jail.⁶

412.* Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, where an accused person has pleaded guilty and has been convicted by a Court of Session or any Presidency Magistrate or Magistrate of the first class on such plea, there shall be no appeal except as to the extent or legality of the sentence.

1. Scope of bar under the section.—The principle underlying the provision is that a plea of guilty by the accused person operates as a waiver of his right to question the legality of the conviction based on such a plea.¹ But, before the bar of this section can be applied against a convicted person, the plea of guilty must be really such a plea. For instance, a plea which only amounts to an admission of facts alleged and not of the offence,² or a plea of guilty based on a misconception of the law of criminal liability,³ or on a misconception of one's right in property,⁴ or in answer to a charge defectively framed and not properly explained to the accused,^{4a} is really a plea of not guilty. Again, it is only in cases where the Court has accepted the plea of guilty and has convicted the accused person on such plea that the right of an appeal from the conviction is taken away.⁵ But once the Court has in its discretion accepted the plea, such discretion cannot afterwards be attacked as improperly exercised so as to affect the provisions of this section.^{5a}

A plea of guilty with regard to previous convictions equally precludes the appellate Court from re-opening the question of the previous convictions in appeal.⁶

As a rule, an appeal cannot be admitted on the question of sentence only. But this section creates an exception to the rule in cases where the conviction has taken place on an admission of guilt by

1. Legislative changes.

Amendments made in 1923 —

- (1) The words "or the District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class" appearing after the words "Court of Session" in the first paragraph of the section and the words "or of whipping only" at the end of the paragraph were repealed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923.
- (2) The words "in which a Court of Session or District Magistrate or other Magistrate of the first class passes a sentence" were inserted between the words "only, or" and "of fine" in the first paragraph of the section by the said Act XII of 1923.

2. Scope of sections 413 to 415A. — Sections 413 to 415A have to be read together. Sections 413 and 414 enact certain exceptions to the right of appeal given by ss. 403 and 410. Section 413 takes away the right of appeal in certain petty cases and S. 414 in certain convictions in summary trials. Sections 415 and 415A are added by way of proviso. Explanations to ss. 413 and 415 are intended to remove possible doubts in the construction of those sections.¹

In order that S. 413 may apply it is necessary to see whether the sentence is one not exceeding the limit prescribed by the section and whether it is passed by a Court of the class mentioned in the section. If these two conditions are satisfied the section would apply, although the sentence is passed under S. 349 or S. 390 of the Code.²

The restrictions on appeal laid down in S. 413 have now been made applicable to European British subjects by the repeal of S. 416.

Section 413

3. Order under section 562.—It has been already noticed in S. 407 Note 1 that an appeal lies from an order under S. 562, notwithstanding the absence of any sentence against the accused. In view of the fact that S. 413 bars an appeal in cases of slight sentences, can it be maintained that an appeal lies where there is no sentence at all? The answer is that an appeal does lie and that the restrictive provisions of S. 413 are not applicable to the case.¹ Any restrictive provision on the right of appeal must be strictly construed and in favour of the subject.² On a strict construction of S. 413, an appeal is barred only in the specific cases mentioned therein. The section cannot bar the right of appeal existing in respect of cases not falling within its specific terms.³

4. "Passes a sentence."—Once a sentence exceeding the limits prescribed by the section is passed, an appeal will lie, as of right, whether the sentence was legal or not. Where, for example, a Magistrate passes a non-appealable sentence at first and subsequently adds to it so as to make it appealable, an appeal lies from such a sentence and the appellate Court cannot strike out the added sentence and decline to go into the merits of the whole appeal on the ground that the original sentence was not appealable.¹

Where a trial is commenced before a second class Magistrate and after the conclusion of evidence he is invested with first class powers, a sentence of fine not exceeding fifty rupees passed by such Magistrate is one 'passed' by a first class Magistrate and is not appealable under this section.²

5. "Sentence of fine."—An award of compensation under S. 22 of the Cattle Trespass Act, I of 1871, is not a sentence of fine within the meaning of this section.¹ Similarly, an order under S. 546A of the

3. "Magistrate empowered to act under section 260." — This section embodies another exception to the right of appeal. It takes away the right of appeal in cases tried summarily under S. 260 of the Code where the sentence is one of fine not exceeding Rs. 200 only. The restriction in this section applies only to convictions by a Magistrate or a Bench of Magistrates of the first class to whom alone S. 260 has reference.¹ Any conviction, therefore, by a Bench of Magistrates of the second or third class is appealable under S. 407 and is not affected by this section.²

The jurisdiction to try a case summarily must be validly exercised. A Magistrate cannot deprive an accused person of his right of appeal by trying a case summarily without having the power to do so.³

As to the constitution and powers of a Bench of Magistrates, see section 15.

4. "Passes a sentence of fine." — The bar under this section operates only when the specific non-appealable sentence mentioned in the section is awarded. Where, therefore, no sentence is passed at all, as for example, an order under S. 562 is passed,¹ this section has no application and an appeal lies from the conviction. See also Notes under S. 407. So also, when the sentence is any other than of a "fine not exceeding Rs. 200 only," the right of appeal is not taken away. A sentence of fine of Rs. 60 coupled with suspension of license under the Motor Vehicles Act is not a sentence of fine only within the meaning of this section and an appeal is not barred.² Similarly, to a case where, in addition to a non-appealable sentence, a further order to furnish

1. Combination of sentences. — It has already been seen in Note 2 to S. 413 that S. 415 is intended by the Legislature as a proviso or an explanation to Ss. 413 and 414. S. 415 has not been altered by the Amending Act of 1923 and remains as it stood before. Ss. 413 and 414 were amended in 1923. In understanding the meaning of S. 415 it will, therefore, be necessary to notice how the law stood under Ss. 413 and 414 before their amendment. The old S. 413 laid down that no appeal lay in cases in which a sentence of imprisonment not exceeding one month only or of fine not exceeding Rs. 50 only or of whipping only was passed. The old S. 414 also contained the same three kinds of alternative punishments. It followed that if each of the two sections barred an appeal only in case there was a sentence, either of a petty imprisonment only or of a petty fine only or of whipping only, the right of appeal was not taken away when any two or more of the alternative punishments were jointly awarded, though each of the said joint punishments, taken by itself, was of the extent not appealable under the said sections.¹ This position was only made clear in S. 415. The words "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" in that section were clearly referable to any two or more of the punishments of imprisonment, fine and whipping mentioned in Ss. 413 and 414 as they stood before the amendment in 1923.

Now by virtue of the amendment in 1923, the punishment of whipping is taken out of S. 413 and whipping as well as imprisonment are taken out of S. 414. But the words "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" have been retained in S. 415. In view of the fact that now S. 414 mentions only one punishment, what is the meaning of the words "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" in this section? It can very well be urged that those words, while meaning punishments of the two kinds mentioned in S. 413, also include several punishments of the same kind mentioned in Ss. 413 and 414. This view derives support from the fact that Ss. 413 and 414 say that no appeal lies from a sentence of fine, etc., thus implying that if there are two or more sentences of fine, etc., the bar will not apply. When there are two or more such sentences, it does not matter if the aggregate of those sentences does not exceed the limits of duration or amount fixed by Ss. 413 and 414. It has, thus, been held by the Chief Court of Oudh² that a person convicted under S. 447 of the Penal Code, and S. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act, and fined Rs. 50 and Rs. 20 respectively by a Magistrate in the exercise of summary powers, was not deprived of the right of appeal by the terms of S. 414, on the ground that two punishments of the nature mentioned in S. 414 have been combined. In a Calcutta case,³ the High Court accepted the contention that S. 413 mentions only a sentence of fine, etc., and does not, therefore, affect a case of two or more sentences of fine. In the later Calcutta cases⁴ however, the above contention was rejected and it was held, that two sentences of fine must, in the aggregate, be above Rs. 50 in order to avoid the bar of S. 413. This view has also been held by the Bombay,⁵ Madras⁶ and Nagpur⁷ High Courts and by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court.⁸ It is submitted that the latter view, though it might be unexceptionable under the old ss. 413 and 414, fails to take into consideration the inevitable effect of construing S. 415 read with ss. 413 and 414 as they stand at present.

A combination of sentences will give a right of appeal only if the sentences are in the same trial and not in separate cases.⁹

On the question whether concurrent sentences of imprisonment can be aggregated under S. 415 for escaping the bar of S. 413 and S. 414 (as it stood before the amendment) there was a difference of opinion. In some cases it was held¹⁰ that such sentences could not be aggregated and in others that they could.¹¹ The amendment in 1923 of S. 35 of the Code has now settled the point by upholding the former view.

2. Order for security to keep the peace. — The section says that the fact of a convicted person being ordered to furnish security to keep the peace will not alter the non-appealable nature of the sentences mentioned in ss. 413 and 414.¹ In a case decided by the Rangoon High Court,² where in a summary trial an accused person was convicted and sentenced to three months imprisonment and was also ordered to give security for good behaviour under S. 31A of the Rangoon Police Act, it was held that an appeal lay under S. 408 and that the right thereto was not taken away by S. 414 (as it stood before the amendment) on the

1. Scope and object. — This section was newly introduced by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923. It was intended to remove doubts that previously existed with regard to the right of appeal in cases where in the same trial appealable and non-appealable sentences were passed against different accused. In some cases, the Courts were of opinion that the accused against whom a non-appealable sentence was passed was also entitled to appeal,¹ and in other cases it was held that such accused had no right of appeal.² The controversy is now set at rest by the enactment of S. 415A which recognizes the right of appeal on behalf of an accused person against whom a non-appealable sentence is passed in a trial in which an appealable judgment is passed against any of the accused persons.³

The Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court has held that the words "appealable judgment" and "right of appeal" in the section should be read together and that the extent of the right of appeal is the same in the case of all the co-accused. So, where an appealable judgment is passed against A and there is no appealable judgment against B, and A is entitled only to appeal as regards his sentence and not as regards his conviction, B can also only appeal as regards the sentence, if any, passed against him and cannot appeal as regards his conviction.⁴ But the Rangoon High Court has held that the section confers a general right of appeal and that although the co-accused (by virtue of whose right of appeal the other accused gets his right of appeal) can only appeal as to his conviction and not as to his sentence, the other accused can appeal as to both.⁵

1a. Sections 415A and 411. — A and B are jointly tried and convicted by a Presidency Magistrate. A is sentenced to six months' imprisonment and B is dealt with under S. 562 without any sentence being passed against him. A is not entitled to appeal under this section because under the terms of S. 411, there being no sentence against B, there is no appealable judgment against B. (A himself cannot appeal because the sentence against him is not of the appealable level.)¹

2. Sections 415A and 412. — A and B are jointly tried and both are convicted on their plea of guilty. But no sentence is passed on A and he is dealt with under S. 562. But an appealable sentence is passed against B. Can A appeal? No; the reason is that B himself can only appeal as to the extent or legality of the sentence passed against him, and A's right of appeal cannot be more extensive than that of B and as no sentence at all has been passed against A, he cannot appeal.¹

3. Sections 415A and 449. — Where leave to appeal is granted under S. 449 of the Code to one of two accused persons jointly tried by the High Court sessions, leave to appeal should be granted to the other accused also by reason of the provisions of this section.¹

the Court of Session.¹ Where the offence is not exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the reasons must disclose grounds, not only for not discharging the accused, but also for committing the case to the Court of Session instead of its being tried by the Magistrate himself.² As to what are proper grounds for committing a case, see Notes to Ss. 206, 207, 209 and 210.

5. Power of Magistrate to cancel charge and discharge accused or to try him himself. — The enactment of sub-section (2) in the Code of 1898 makes it clear that even after a charge is framed with a view to commitment, the Magistrate has power to cancel the charge and discharge the accused if, in view of the evidence of the defence witnesses examined subsequent to the charge, the Magistrate considers that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the case.¹ The decisions prior to the Code of 1898, which held that the Magistrate had no such power,² are no longer good law. But the sub-section is only intended to provide for cases, in which the evidence recorded after a charge, so changes the aspect of the case as to leave no reasonable doubt that a conviction is not sustainable. It does not apply when the evidence merely casts some doubt on the case.³ But when the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that the evidence of the defence witnesses, examined subsequent to the charge, rebuts that produced for the prosecution or renders it so incredible or unreliable that a conviction will not follow, he may act upon his opinion and pass an order of discharge.⁴ See also S. 209 Notes 3 and 5, and S. 210 Note 5.

Such appeal shall lie to the High Court, and the rules of limitation shall not apply to appeals presented under this section.

Code of 1861 — Nil.

Note 1

1. Scope and applicability of the section.—Section 407 of the Code of 1861 prohibited appeals from a judgment of acquittal of any criminal Court and an order of acquittal was therefore conclusive.¹ The extraordinary remedy of an appeal against an acquittal received a statutory recognition for the first time in 1872² in the interests of public safety, peace and order.³

But the Legislature has by no means overlooked the fact that an appeal against an acquittal is an exception to the general principle of criminal law, and is one which needs considerable safeguarding. Such safeguards are three in number, namely:—

- (a) that the right of appeal shall be exercised by the Provincial Government only,
- (b) that every such appeal shall be made through the Public Prosecutor,
- (c) that every such appeal shall be tried by the High Court only.

Before, therefore, a person acquitted can undergo any further trial for the offence of which he has been acquitted, the highest executive authority must hold that it is desirable; the highest legal authority must advise that it is legal and proper and the highest judicial authority must find that it is just that the order should be set aside.⁴

The object of the section is only to enable the Provincial Government to have a wrongful acquittal converted into a conviction or to have a re-trial and not to enable it to obtain from the High Court opinions on abstract questions which do not arise on the facts established.⁵

The provisions of this section are not qualified by any restriction which may be derived from a consideration of the terms of S. 414; an appeal will, therefore, lie against an order of acquittal in a case tried summarily under S. 260.⁶ This section does not control the powers of

It is a matter of practice that the Provincial Government is and can be moved by private individuals or by the Police through the District Magistrate or by the latter himself as the head of the criminal administration in his district.⁴

caution.^{2a} It is a special weapon intended for exceptional occasions and which is to be only used after most anxious consideration and in cases which are themselves of great public importance or in which a principle is involved; it cannot be expected that the Government will dull the edge of that statutory provision by utilizing it freely in cases which are of no or little general interest.³ The making of a direction under this section should be limited to those instances in which there is a grave miscarriage of justice⁴ or where it is required in the interests of justice and of the public.⁵

The exercise of the discretion is not subject to control by the High Court and cannot be questioned in dealing with such appeals.⁶

Can an appeal under this section be preferred by the Provincial Government against an order of acquittal when an appeal preferred by the accused against his conviction has already been heard and decided by the High Court? This question can only arise in cases where an accused person is acquitted of a graver charge but convicted of a lesser charge on the same facts. In such a case, both the Provincial Government and the accused person have a right of appeal. If both the appeals are preferred they should ordinarily be heard together; but if the appeal of the accused person is heard and decided by a High Court before the Provincial Government has appealed, is the appeal of the Provincial Government barred? Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court⁷ has held, overruling the view of the same Court in an earlier case,⁸ that an appeal against an acquittal for a major offence can be preferred by the Provincial Government although an appeal preferred by the accused against his conviction for a minor offence has been heard and decided by the High Court. But, where the appeal by the accused is pending hearing, it should be postponed, if in the opinion of the standing counsel for the Government it is likely that the Government will appeal against the acquittal so that both may be heard together. But it need not be postponed if there is only a possibility that the Government may desire to appeal.

4. "Public Prosecutor." — Under this section, it is the Public Prosecutor that is to be directed to present an appeal to the High Court. The term "Public Prosecutor" is defined in clause (t) of S. 4 (1) of the Code. Section 492 provides for the appointment generally or in any case or for any specified class of cases, one or more officers called "Public Prosecutors."¹ Therefore, an appeal against an acquittal presented to the High Court by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal, who by Notification has been appointed by the Provincial Government to be, by virtue of his office, Public Prosecutor in all cases heard by the High Court of Bengal in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction, is not incompetent.² But the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal cannot be deemed to be the Public Prosecutor for the Province of Behar, from the mere fact that he has been directed by the Government of Behar and Orissa to present such an appeal without his being appointed as such and when there is already a Public Prosecutor for the Province of Behar.³

5. "High Court." — An appeal under this section lies only to the High Court. So a District Magistrate¹ or a Deputy Magistrate² or a Sessions Judge³ has no right to entertain an appeal against an order of acquittal.

Notes 5-7

6. Order of acquittal.—The words “conviction” and “acquittal” are not applied in the Code to an order under S. 118 and are inapplicable to it. Therefore, an order of a Sessions Judge setting aside the order of a Magistrate calling upon a person to furnish security for good behaviour is not an order of acquittal within the meaning of this section so as to enable the Provincial Government to prefer an appeal under this section.¹

An order dismissing the complaint for the non-appearance of the complainant under S. 247 is an order of acquittal within the meaning of this section.²

The words ‘appellate order of acquittal’ mean and include all orders of an appellate Court by which a conviction is set aside.³

The ‘acquittal’ contemplated in the section need not be on all the charges made against the accused. The Provincial Government is not deprived of its right to appeal in cases where an accused person has been acquitted of a serious charge merely because at the same trial, he was convicted of a less serious charge.⁴ So, where an accused charged with a serious charge is acquitted of that charge but is convicted of a less serious one, it is open to the Government to prefer an appeal so far as the charge on which he was acquitted is concerned.⁵ The view held in the undermentioned cases⁶ that an ‘acquittal’ means a complete acquittal on all the charges is no longer correct since the decision of the Privy Council in Kishan Singh v. Emperor.⁷

7. Interlocutory orders.—There is no appeal provided against any interlocutory order. So where a Sessions Judge declines to try a case on the ground of want of jurisdiction, there is no order of acquittal and no appeal lies against such an order.¹ On the question whether it is open to the Government to prefer an appeal on an order of the Sessions Judge refusing to amend or add new charges, there is a difference of opinion. In Queen-Empress v. Vaji Ram,² Telang, J., held that "the appeal allowed was only from any original or appellate order of acquittal and the order refusing to allow additional charges is not an order which falls within those terms especially when it is not even an order which can be said to form the basis of the order of acquittal or a necessary condition of its tenability."

However, in Emperor v. Stewart,³ while Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C., agreed with this view of Telang, J., Kincaid, J. C., held that although the section gives no power of appeal against an order refusing to amend charges, if such order is followed by an original or appellate order of acquittal, the Provincial Government may direct an appeal to be presented.

1. Scope and applicability of the section.—This section provides that an appeal will lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law, except where the trial is by jury in which case an appeal will lie on a matter of law only.

The section applies equally to all criminal appeals, whether made by the Provincial Government against an acquittal or made by accused person against a conviction.¹ Thus, where in a jury case the Provincial Government preferred an appeal against an acquittal on questions of fact, it was held that the appeal was incompetent.² But, in a case tried by a Judge with the help of assessors³ or by a Magistrate,⁴ it is competent for the Provincial Government to appeal against an acquittal both on the question of law and on the question of fact. The section does not, in any way, curtail the powers of the High Court to deal with questions of fact as well, in a jury case, in a reference under S. 307⁵ or under S. 374⁶ of the Code.

The section does not apply to cases tried by a jury in a High Court or a Court of Session under the provisions of chapter XXXIII of the Code. In those cases, under S. 449, an appeal lies to the High Court on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law. See S. 449 and Notes thereunder.

The section does not confer a right of appeal from the verdict and judgment in a trial held at the sessions of the High Court.⁷ But a Judge of the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court sitting in its Sessions Court jurisdiction is a Sessions Judge and an appeal lies to the Judicial Commissioner's Court against a conviction recorded on a trial held before him sitting with a jury.⁸ See also S. 266 Note 4.

2. Trial by jury.—An appeal under this section in cases tried by jury lies on matters of law only and the appellate Court cannot go into the facts of the case.¹ Where facts are in issue the verdict of a jury is absolutely final and must be given effect to. The section jealously guards the right of the accused to the finality of the verdict of the jury, so that an appellate Court cannot, by going into a question of fact, substitute its own opinion for the verdict of the jury.^{1a}

The power to cancel a charge and discharge the accused applies only before the case is committed. Once the case has been committed, the Magistrate becomes functus officio and cannot thereafter change his mind and cancel the commitment or discharge the accused.⁵ Moreover, the Magistrate's power under the sub-section arises only in cases where he has taken further evidence after the framing of the charge; where he has not taken such further evidence, he cannot cancel the charge once framed and discharge the accused.⁶ The power of cancelling a charge once framed and discharging the accused does not apply to trials of warrant cases; the only course open to a Magistrate who, after framing a charge in such cases finds that the charge is unsustainable, is to acquit the accused⁷; see S. 258 and Notes thereunder; see also Note 1, and Notes to section 210.

6. "After hearing the witnesses for the defence." — As has been seen in Note 5, the power of the Magistrate under sub-s.(2) to cancel the charge and discharge the accused arises only in cases in which, after framing the charge, the Magistrate examines further defence witnesses; where further evidence is not taken by him, he cannot cancel the charge and discharge the accused.¹

As to whether the phrase "witnesses for defence" in sub-s.(2) is wide enough to cover evidence elicited by cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, see Note 7.

7. Right of accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses after charge is framed. — Under the general principles of evidence (see Evidence Act, section 138) and the specific provision contained in S. 208, sub-section (2), the accused, in preliminary inquiries in sessions cases, is entitled as of right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution. Ordinarily, the cross-examination of each witness must be made immediately after his examination-in-chief is over; it cannot

It is only in respect of the offence which is committed to the sessions that the proceedings are taken out of the purview of Chap. 21 under S. 347 and with reference to the other part of the offence, the procedure under that chapter alone should be followed and after a charge is framed an accused can only be acquitted and cannot be discharged. S. 347 does not authorize such a discharge.)

The words "where the trial was by jury" mean "where the trial was in fact held by jury" and not "where the trial ought to have been held by jury" and, therefore, where the accused is tried by a jury in a case which ought to have been tried with the aid of assessors, trial will be treated as one by a jury and no appeal lies except on a matter of law.² The contrary view held in the undermentioned decisions³ can no longer be considered to be good law.

Where an accused person is tried on one charge by a jury and on another charge by the Judge, with the aid of the same jury as assessors, an appeal will lie against conviction on the latter charge on a question of fact as well as on a question of law.⁴ In the undermentioned case⁵ it was held that where the charge tried by the jury and the charge tried by the Judge with the aid of the same jury as assessors are so connected together that, if the facts relating to the former charge cannot be challenged, the conclusion will be irresistible that the conviction on the latter charge is properly made, the appellant can challenge the facts on which his conviction on the former charge is based. As appeals in cases tried by a jury can only be on a point of law, every petition of appeal should state distinctly in what respect the law has been contravened. It is not for the Court to hunt through the records and find out any illegality that may arise.⁶

3. "On a matter of law only."—A misdirection or non-direction by the Judge to the jury is a matter of law. If the verdict has been influenced by evidence, which was inadmissible or proceeds on no evidence at all, this is again a matter of law.¹ But the reception of inadmissible evidence which has not influenced the verdict does not vitiate the trial.²

The sufficiency or otherwise of evidence is not a matter of law; whether the jury believes the evidence to be sufficient or not is a pure question of fact.³

The explanation to the section recognizes another matter of law, namely, the alleged severity of a sentence.⁴ See also the under-mentioned cases.⁵

4. Sub-section (2).—This sub-section was added in 1923. Before that it was held in a series of cases¹ that where in a trial by jury, of several accused, one of the accused was sentenced to death and others to lesser punishments, and all of them appealed, the High Court, on a reference under S. 374 in respect of the person sentenced to death, could go into the facts, but in dealing with the appeals of other persons, they must be confined to matters of law and could not enter into the facts. This anomaly has been removed by the insertion of this sub-section which provides that when in the case of a trial by jury, one person is sentenced to death, and another to lesser punishment, the second accused may appeal on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law.²

1. Scope of the section.—Section 420 deals with the presentation of appeals from jail. This section is general and prescribes the form in which a petition of appeal, whether from jail or otherwise, is to be presented.¹

Where an appeal is presented through the officer in charge of the jail under S. 420 and is dismissed summarily under S. 421, no further appeal can be brought under this section.² Nor does an appeal lie from the order of the High Court, dismissing the previous appeal under S. 421.³ See also Note 9 to S. 421.

2. Copy of judgment to accompany.—Every petition of appeal should normally be accompanied by a copy of the judgment.¹ The absence of a complete judgment in the record is, however, not a ground for refusing to entertain the appeal.^{1a}

Where a petition of appeal is not accompanied by a copy of the judgment, the appeal may be rejected.²

The Court may, however, in its discretion, in proper cases, dispense with the copy of the judgment.³ Where three accused preferred a joint appeal with a single copy of judgment, but furnished stamps necessary for three separate copies of judgment, it was held that the Court should, in exercise of the discretion, dispense with separate copies of judgment and hear the appeal.⁴ Similarly, where the full order appealed against was furnished along with one of the connected applications, it was held that the production of the judgment in other applications might be dispensed with.⁵

3. Who can present petition of appeal. — Under the Code of 1872, there was no specific provision as to who should present an appeal and it was held that any person authorized by the appellant could present it.¹ Under the Code of 1882, and the present Code, only the appellant or his pleader can make such presentation. The word "pleader" includes a mukhtar appointed with the permission of the Court² and he is entitled to present an appeal on behalf of his party. Presentation by a pleader's clerk is considered equivalent to a presentation by the pleader and is valid.³ But a person, who is not a pleader's clerk and one over whose conduct and action he has no control, has no power to present an appeal on behalf of the party.⁴ Where a petition of appeal on behalf of three accused was signed under a vakalat by their pleader, but the presentation was made by another pleader, who had a vakalat only from one of the accused, it was held that the appeal should be treated as properly presented.⁵

Where two accused have conflicting interests, they should not appeal through the same pleader.⁶

It is not necessary that a vakalat should be filed. A memorandum of appearance is sufficient to validate a presentation.⁷

4. Presentation to be in person. — The presentation of a petition of appeal should be made in person. A petition put into a petition box kept for the convenience of the parties cannot be recognized for the reason that it could have been deposited there by a third party.¹ Nor can a petition be sent by post.² Where, however, the District Magistrate proceeded to treat a petition sent by post as if it was duly presented, it was held that it should not be dismissed without giving the petitioner an opportunity of being heard.³

5. To whom appeal should be presented. — No specific provision has been made by the Code as to the person to whom an appeal is to be presented, and the question, therefore, has been held to be merely one of administrative convenience and a presentation to an officer of the Court, such as a bench clerk, or to one of the

6. Contents of petition. — A petition of appeal should not contain irrelevant, defamatory and scandalous expressions concerning the trying Magistrate. If it does, it will be returned for expunging the objectionable matter.¹

In cases of trial by jury, the appeal can only be on a point of law and the appeal petition should state clearly what points of law have been contravened.²

Where an appellant, who has not got all necessary copies when presenting an appeal, reserves to himself liberty to bring forward additional points of appeal afterwards, it is perfectly regular, under such circumstances, to raise such additional points by a supplemental petition.³

A false statement made in a petition of appeal will not render the appellant liable for prosecution for making such false statement.⁴ See also section 342 Note 31.

When it is contended that an alleged illegality or error vitiates the whole trial, such a plea, though not taken in the memorandum of appeal, will be allowed to be raised at the hearing of the appeal.⁵

7. Form of petition. — Even if the prisoners wish to state no grounds for their appeal, still their appeal must, according to law, be in the form of a petition.¹ There is no provision of law which requires the petitioner to verify the petition of appeal.²

Where appeals are filed by several persons convicted by a single judgment in a joint trial, they should, according to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur, be made separately.³ The practice in the Chief Court of Oudh seems to be that such persons can file a single appeal with a single copy of judgment.⁴ The Lahore High Court has

Where the memorandum of appeal alleges that one of the jurors was hard of hearing, another ignorant of English and unable to follow the arguments in Court, such facts should be supported by an affidavit before the appeal comes on for hearing, in time, so that the Crown could make the necessary enquiries and file counter-affidavit.⁶

9. Limitation. — See Authors' Commentaries on Limitation Act, Articles 150, 154 and 155.

10. Stamp. — The appeal petition presented by a pleader on behalf of an appellant in duress need not bear a court-fee stamp as per clause 17 of S. 19 of the Court-fees Act.¹ The appellants, who are not in custody, cannot take advantage of the unstamped copy of the judgment of the lower Court which the appellants, who were in prison, were entitled to use. Those appellants, who were not in custody, must affix the necessary stamp.²

11. Petition in non-appealable cases. — Though a petition has been filed as an appeal, where no appeal lies, the High Court can deal with it as in revision.¹

in charge of the jail, who shall thereupon forward such petition and copies to the proper appellate Court.

1. "Copies accompanying the same."— A copy of the judgment should accompany appeals presented to jail officers under this section in the same manner as an appeal under S. 419. Appeals not accompanied by such copies should not be forwarded to the appellate Court, but should be returned to the appellant.¹ When a prisoner in jail applies through the Superintendent of the jail for a copy of judgment in order to prefer an appeal, it is the Magistrate's business to procure and forward the copy applied for, or to arrange that this should be done.² See Note 2 to section 419.

2. Presentation to the officer in charge of the jail.— The presentation to the officer in charge of the jail is good and sufficient whatever delay there may be in forwarding the petition to the appellate Court.¹ Every facility such as pen, paper and ink should be given to the prisoner in jail to enable him to prepare his petition.²

3. "Forward such petition and copies to the proper appellate Court."— A vacation Judge can hear and dispose of an appeal from jail.¹ According to the Criminal Circulars issued by the Calcutta High Court, the officer in charge of the jail should not forward petitions of appeal from prisoners to the High Court in cases in which sentences or orders have already been passed by an appellate Court on appeal. In such cases, parties should apply to the High Court by motion made by a pleader in open Court.² According to the said Circulars, the petition of appeal against sentences or orders passed by the Sessions Judge, presented to officer in charge of the jail, should be forwarded by such officer direct to the High Court, intimation of the fact being at once given to the Sessions Judge whose sentence or order is appealed against.³ All communications from the officer in charge of the jail to the Sessions Judge, relative to appeals of the prisoners to him, should be made to the Judge direct and not through the District Magistrate who has no concern with the decision of the Sessions Judge in appeal, and the appellate Court should certify its decision to the Magistrate from whose decision the appeal has been preferred and such

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section gives an appellate Court, a summary power of dismissing an appeal, if after perusing the petition and the copy of judgment, and, if necessary, the records and if after hearing the appellant or his pleader, it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interference.¹ The essential difference between the dismissal of an appeal under this section and its dismissal under S. 423 is that, in the latter case the appeal is disposed of after trial, whereas in the former, the Court by summarily dismissing it refuses to try it at all.² Even where an appeal has not been summarily dismissed, the Court is not precluded, when it hears the appeal under S. 423, from deciding whether an appeal lies.³

The provisions of this section apply both to appeals presented under S. 417 against orders of acquittal and to other appeals.⁴ As to be reserved till the examination-in-chief of all the witnesses for a side is over, though the Court can, in the exercise of its discretion, allow such reservation. Hence, an accused, who has declined to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses then and there and who has not been permitted by the Magistrate to reserve his cross-examination till a later stage, is not entitled to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed;¹ a fortiori, if he has already cross-examined the prosecution witnesses under S. 208, before the charge was framed, he is not entitled to cross-examine them again after the charge is framed.² (Contrast the right of an accused in the trial of warrant cases under S. 256.) The expression "witnesses for the defence" in sub-s.(2) refers to witnesses whom the Magistrate in his discretion examines under S. 212; that expression does not include the witnesses for the prosecution who are cross-examined, and therefore does not confer any right on the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed.³ But the Magistrate has an inherent power to allow the accused an opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed.⁴ Further, if the accused did not have an opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses before the charge was framed, he is entitled to cross-examine them after the charge is framed and before the order for commitment is passed.⁵

As to the right of an accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses in cases where the proceedings are started as a trial of a warrant case but subsequently the Magistrate decides to commit the case to the Court of Session, see S. 347 and Notes thereunder.

whether this section applies to appeals under S. 476B, see Note 4 to section 476B.

Note 1

The appellate Court, while acting under this section, cannot dispose of the appeal piece-meal. So, where an appellant was convicted at one trial on two separate charges, and the appellate Court admitted the appeal with regard to one charge and summarily dismissed the appeal with regard to the other, it was held that the procedure, though not illegal, was unusual and undesirable.⁵

An appeal can be dismissed summarily only when the appellate Court considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering. Hence, where the appellate Court considers that there is sufficient ground for interfering with regard to the sentence though not with the conviction, it is not a case for summary dismissal of the appeal.⁶ Nor can the appellate Court admit an appeal with restrictions. Thus, it cannot admit an appeal with regard to sentence only.^{6a} The whole appeal will be open to consideration for the final hearing.⁷ The reason is that the terms of the section exclude the possibility of partial summary dismissal, e. g., in so far as the conviction is appealed against.⁸

The Bombay High Court has held that when the High Court on a criminal appeal considers that the conviction should be maintained but that the sentence is too severe, the difficulty of having to hear the entire appeal unnecessarily can be avoided by first reducing the sentence in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction and then dismissing the appeal summarily on the ground that there is no further cause for interference.⁹

But it has been held that, where the other points have been specifically considered and a definite order of dismissal on other points has been passed, the whole appeal cannot be re-opened again.¹⁰

While summarily dismissing an appeal under this section, an appellate Court cannot alter¹¹ or enhance¹² or reduce¹³ the sentence or modify the order appealed from in any other way.¹⁴

An appeal once admitted cannot be dismissed summarily under this section.¹⁵

Unless an appeal is dismissed summarily, the appellate Court is bound to issue notice under S. 422 and to send for the record of the case under S. 423.¹⁶

The dismissal of an appeal temporarily, as for instance, the dismissal of an appeal till the decision of a civil suit, is unknown to law. If necessary, the appellate Court can postpone the decision of an appeal in a proper case.¹⁷

2. "Shall peruse the same." — There is no provision in the Code for the dismissal of an appeal on account of the non-appearance of the appellant or his pleader. The appellate Court is bound, even in the absence of the appellant or his pleader, to peruse the judgment and the record, if it has been sent for, and decide the appeal judicially.¹

The section contemplates an appeal that can be properly put upon the file of the Court. Therefore, an appeal preferred out of time and without any explanation of the delay, may be dismissed at once,² but if the appellant is represented by a pleader, he should be given an opportunity of being heard in the matter of determining whether the delay should be excused and the appeal admitted.³

3. "May dismiss the appeal summarily." — The powers conferred by this section, on the appellate Court, should be exercised sparingly and with great caution¹ and with judicial discretion.² Where important or complicated questions of fact and law are involved, or where disputed questions of title to immovable property are involved, the Court should not summarily dismiss an appeal but should send for the record and hear the appeal fully and decide.³ It is however not illegal to do so.⁴

The fact that the appeal of one co-accused has been admitted does not take away the power of the Court to dispose of the appeal of another accused summarily.⁵

4. "No sufficient ground for interfering." — Unless the Court is satisfied that there is no sufficient ground for interfering in accordance with the relief sought in the appeal, the appeal cannot be dismissed summarily under this section.¹ As to whether the appellant is bound to satisfy the Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering with the conviction, see Note 14 to S. 423.

Section 421

5. Right of appellant to be heard — Proviso. — The proviso gives an appellant or his pleader, in cases of appeals filed under S. 419, the right to a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal.¹ The proviso, by its words, restricts this right to cases coming under S. 419 and, therefore, does not apply to appeals presented under S. 420 from jail. Hence, in the cases of jail appeals, the Court can summarily dismiss the appeal on perusal of the papers without calling upon the appellant to appear.^{1a} But, although a convicted person presenting his appeal from jail has no right to be heard in person under this section, still, whenever the appellate Court considers it desirable that the accused should be heard, it has power to direct the production of the prisoner before it for disposing of the appeal.²

Where, however, the appellant from jail has also preferred an appeal through a pleader, the appellate Court is not competent to dismiss the appeal, without giving the pleader an opportunity of being heard.³

Under the proviso, the opportunity that is to be given of being heard should be reasonable. Reasonable opportunity cannot be said to have been given to the appellant or his pleader in the following cases, viz. :

- (1) Where the appellate Court calls upon the pleader to argue the appeal on the same day that it is presented, and refuses to grant him time to acquaint himself with the evidence in the case.⁴
- (2) Where on the presentation of a petition by a pleader, time is wanted, for some other pleader to argue the case but the Court calls on him to argue it himself then and there.⁵

Section 421
Note 5

- (9) Where an appeal signed by a pleader is presented in person by the appellant and the Court, without giving time for the pleader to come and argue the case, forthwith calls upon the appellant himself to argue.⁶

But there is nothing in the section to prevent the appellate Court from hearing the appellant's pleader at the time of presentation, if the pleader himself desires to do so. No further opportunity need be given in such a case.⁷

As to what is reasonable time, it has been held that at least a week's time should be given.⁸ Where an appeal was filed in the headquarters of an appellate Court on 26th July 1875, and notice was given for hearing on 28th July 1875, at a place many miles from the headquarters, it was held that the appellant was not given a reasonable opportunity.⁹ Where a general notice was posted in the court house, stating that appeals will be heard for admission only on the first Court day next after presentation, it was held that it was not in compliance with the section and a time should be fixed in each case and notice should be given to the appellant or his pleader, in such case.¹⁰

Where no notice at all is given to the appellant or pleader of the date to which the appeal is posted, it is a clear case where no opportunity has been given to be heard.¹¹ No notice to the Crown is necessary before dismissing an appeal against a conviction summarily.¹²

The further question arises whether, after the appellant or his pleader has been heard, and the Court then sends for the records of the case, the Court is bound to give opportunity to the appellant or his pleader to be heard again on the records. All that the section requires is that the pleader shall have a reasonable opportunity of being heard, before there is a summary dismissal, and once having heard him, it is not obligatory on the Court to hear him again when it sends for the record, though it may do so, if the Court or the pleader desires it.¹³ But a contrary view, namely that the Court is bound to hear the pleader a second time after the record is sent for and received has been taken in the undermentioned cases.¹⁴ It is submitted that the view is not justified by the language of this section and is also against the weight of authority.

The right of being heard in support will include the right of reply¹⁵ as well as the right to refer to certified copies of the evidence.¹⁶

6. "May call for the record of the case" — Sub-section (2).

— Under this sub-section, the Court may, before dismissing an appeal, call for the record of the case but it is not bound to do so.¹ Although a Judge would be acting within his powers in rejecting an appeal without calling for the records, such a course is, ordinarily, very inconvenient and should not be adopted.² A Court is not required to call for the records in an appeal in which the only question is a mere question of fact and the judgment of the Court below is so plain and clear that calling for the record would be a mere waste of time; but it is not right to reject an appeal summarily when a point of law which, on the face of it, is not without substance, has been raised or when the judgment is a long and intricate one requiring, obviously, careful consideration.³

7. Judgment and record of reasons. — A Court, when dismissing an appeal summarily under this section, is not required to write a judgment in conformity with the provisions of S. 367.¹

Although the law does not fetter the discretion of an appellate Court in dismissing appeals summarily and it can do so without recording any reasons for so doing,² it is advisable to record its reasons for summary dismissal, in view of the possibility of such an order being challenged by an application for revision, in which case they will show that the Court had really considered the points raised in the appeal and that the appeal was without foundation.³ Therefore, though

11. Appeal. — A judgment by a Judge of a High Court dismissing an appeal under this section is an order made in a criminal trial in appeal, and therefore no appeal lies from such an order.¹

The notice must be served personally on the person to be served and only if after due diligence it cannot be served personally, can it be served on any adult male member of the family. (See ss. 69 and 70). So, where the notice of an appeal was served on an accused person's father, it was held that the officer who was entrusted with the service should swear to an affidavit that he made his best endeavours to effect personal service but that he could not do so.^{1a}

Where it is not possible to serve the notice as under ss. 69 and 70, the notice or a copy of it should under s. 71 be left at the address given in the appeal. It is not competent to an appellate Court to hear and decide an appeal in the appellant's absence simply because he cannot be found at the address given by him.²

Where in spite of due notice having been given the parties or their pleaders fail to appear at the hearing of the appeal, but only appear on the date fixed for delivery of the judgment, the appellate Court is not bound to hear them.³

2. Notice to appellant or pleader. — Notice under this section must be given to the appellant or his pleader. Under s. 279, the corresponding section of the Code of 1872, notice had to be given only to the appellant, the words "or his pleader" being absent. It was, therefore, held that the fact that the pleader of the accused was present in Court when an order was made admitting an appeal did not relieve the Court from the necessity of giving notice to the appellant of the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal.¹ Under the present section, it is enough if notice is given to the appellant or his pleader.

3. Notice to accused. — Under this section notice is necessary to the accused only in cases where there is an appeal against acquittal under section 417. A notice to the accused person, therefore, to whom compensation is ordered to be paid under s. 250 is unnecessary.¹ But seeing that he is the only person interested in upholding the order, it is desirable that notice should be given to him.^{1a} But the High Court

4. Notice to complainant-respondent. — Under this section a complainant-respondent cannot claim as of right to be heard in the appeal. The matter is one which is left in each case to the discretion of the Court.¹

Though there is no provision in case of an order under S. 545 of the Code, with regard to notice to the complainant to whom compensation has been awarded, one of the fundamental principles of law is that no order should be passed to the detriment or prejudice of a party without giving him an opportunity of being heard in defence. In that view notice should, in the exercise of the appellate Court's discretion, be given to a complainant of the hearing of an appeal against a conviction in a case in which the complainant has been awarded compensation.² But the fact that notice of appeal was not served on the complainant-respondent is no ground for interference where no injustice has been occasioned thereby.³ See also section 545 Note 16.

5. Officer appointed by the Provincial Government. — Under this section notice should go to the officer appointed by the Provincial Government in this behalf.

The officer appointed by the Provincial Government in Bombay is the District Magistrate.¹ In Bengal the officer appointed by the Provincial Government is the District Magistrate except where the PART D — NOTICE OF APPEAL.

The following Notifications under S. 422 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, prescribing the officers to whom notice is to be given of an appeal which is not summarily rejected, are re-printed for information and guidance.

I. Punjab Government Notification No. 172 dated the 28th January 1891.

With reference to S. 422 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1882, prescribing that any Appellate Court which does not reject an appeal summarily shall cause notice to be given to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to direct that, in the case of an appeal preferred by a Railway employee in a case in which he has been convicted of an offence committed in his capacity of Railway servant, the Appellate Court shall cause notice to be given of the time and place of hearing of such appeal to the Head of the Railway Administration concerned as well as to the District Magistrate, as directed in Punjab Government Notification No. 108-597 dated 8th February 1883.

II. Punjab Government Notification No. 1764, dated the 7th December 1898.

With reference to S. 422 of Act V of 1898, the Code of Criminal Procedure, prescribing that any Appellate Court which does not reject an appeal summarily shall cause notice to be given to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf of the time and place at which such appeal will be heard, the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to direct, in supersession of notification No. 108, dated 8th February 1883, that in the case of appeals other than those which lie to the District, or specially empowered Magistrate, the Appellate Court shall cause notice of the time and place of the hearing of such appeal to be given :

- (1) to the Government Advocate, in all cases in which the sentence is one of death, transportation for a life or transportation or imprisonment for a term of not less than ten years ;
- (2) to the Magistrate of the District, in other cases.

III. Punjab Government Notification No. 206, dated the 10th February 1905.

With reference to S. 422 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1898, prescribing that any Appellate Court which does not reject an appeal summarily shall cause notice to be given to such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf, the Hon'ble the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to direct that in the case of an appeal preferred by a postal employee in a case in which he has been convicted of an offence committed in his capacity of postal servant, the Appellate Court shall cause notice to be given of the time and place of hearing of such appeal to the Postmaster-General, Punjab and North-West Frontier Province, as well as the District Magistrate concerned as directed in Punjab Government Notification No. 108-597, dated 8th February 1883.

Rule 240. The following officers are the officers to whom notices of appeal shall be given under S. 422, Code of Criminal Procedure :

- (1) District Magistrates in appeals other than appeals to Court of Session ;
- (2) The Public Prosecutor in appeals to Court of Session ;
- (3) The Prosecuting Inspector of Police in mofussil districts other than the Nilgiris in appeals against convictions in cognizable cases in the appellate Courts in those districts other than the Court of Session ;
- (4) The Agent and Manager of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway and the Agent of the South Indian Railway in appeals against convictions for Railway offences in connexion with those railways respectively ;

As to Oudh and Central Provinces, see below.⁵

Section 422
Notes 5-6

Where the District Magistrate is the officer who is to receive the notice and the appeal is filed in his Court and heard by himself, no notice to him is necessary.⁶ But where the appeal is transferred to a joint Magistrate for hearing, the fact that it was originally filed before the District Magistrate does not relieve the joint Magistrate of his duty of giving notice to the District Magistrate.⁷

6. Time and place of hearing. — Under this section, the notice should specify the time and place at which the appeal will be heard. The Court of appeal should fix a date for hearing and determine it on that day. Where the appeal was directed to be heard "in January" without fixing a date and the appeal was taken up and dismissed on a particular day, without any information to the appellant as to the time of hearing, it was held that the dismissal was improper.¹ So also, a notice to an appellant's pleader that his appeal would be heard next day wherever the Court happened to be encamped is not sufficient.² An appeal posted for hearing at one place cannot be heard and dismissed at another place, without giving notice to the appellant or his pleader of the change of place.³ So also, an appeal posted for hearing on a particular date cannot be heard on a date previous to that fixed.⁴

(5) The District Forest Officer in appeals against convictions for forest offences, except in cases of offences relating to unreserved lands. In such cases notice shall be given to the Revenue Divisional Officer who ordered the prosecution ;

(6) Officers of the Salt and Excise Department in charge of circles in appeals against convictions for Salt and Excise offences in their circles ; and in appeals to the High Court in Abkari cases, to the Inspector of Excise, Madras Town Circle ;

(7) The Crown Prosecutor for the Town of Madras in appeals to the High Court from the judgments or orders of the Presidency Magistrate and the Public Prosecutor in other appeals to the High Court.

5. The Oudh Criminal Rules (1928) :

Rule 3. As soon as the date is fixed, the appellate Court shall cause notice to be given to the appellant as well as to the District Magistrate who shall inform the appellate Court whether any one will appear to support the conviction.

Rule 4. In all criminal appeals before Sessions Judges, notice shall be given to Government Pleaders, whether such appeals be presented by pleaders or agents or received through the Superintendent of jails.

Criminal Circulars of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces (1929) :
Rule 10. The following are the officers to whom notices of appeal shall be given under S. 422 of the Code :

(1) The District Magistrate in all appeals filed before the Court of Session of Judicial Commissioner ;

(2) The Prosecuting Inspector of Sub-Inspector of Police in appeals to the District Magistrate's Court or to Courts of Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate.

Where a pleader appeared at 10 A. M. to argue the criminal appeal on the day notified for hearing, and was informed that the appeal was disposed of on merits at 7-30 A. After perusing such record, and hearing the appellant or his pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, and, in case of an appeal under section 417, the accused, if he appears, the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal, or may —

- (b) in an appeal from a conviction, (1) reverse the finding and sentence, and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such Appellate Court or committed for trial, or (2) alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or, with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence, or, (3) with or without such reduction and with or without altering the finding, alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of section 106, sub-section (3), not so as to enhance the same;

1. Scope of the section.—This section prescribes the powers of the appellate Court in disposing of an appeal. The powers conferred on the appellate Court are as ample as those of the High Court on revision under S. 439 with the exception of the power to enhance the sentence.¹ Where the appellate Court is the High Court itself, it has not only the powers under this section, but also those under S. 439. As an appellate Court, it can, under this section, alter the conviction to one for an offence of which the accused was acquitted by the lower Court, but it has no such power in revision. As a revision Court it can enhance the sentence passed by the lower Court though as an appellate Court it has no such power. Thus, by a combination of Ss. 423 and 439, the High Court, in appeal, can convict the accused of an offence of which he had been acquitted and also enhance the sentence.² Where an appeal is before the High Court, the accused may be warned that, at the hearing of the petition, he may be called on to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced.³ But the stage at which the revisional powers can be exercised does not arise until the peremptory provisions of Ss. 422 and 423 have been complied with; thus, the High Court cannot, if it does not dismiss the appeal summarily under S. 421, act under S. 439 without notice under S. 422 and without sending for the record under S. 423.⁴

There is another distinction between this section and S. 439. Under the latter section findings of fact are not ordinarily open to review and a proviso against altering an acquittal into a conviction has been expressly added therein. On the other hand, this section is concerned with the powers of a Court of Appeal when the facts are before the Court, and in the absence of a proviso limiting the powers as to alteration of findings, such a proviso cannot be implied.^{4a}

The powers of the Court under this section must be read subject to other provisions of law limiting the right of interference to the extent specified by such provision. See the undermentioned cases.⁵

"Shall then send for the record." — Where the appeal is not dismissed summarily under S. 421, the appellate Court is bound to send for the record, if such record is not already in Court.¹ Where the entire record was lost, the High Court set aside the conviction and ordered a fresh trial.² In *Kamakshamma v. through the record and dispose of the appeal on the merits.¹ This duty is irrespective of the question whether the appellant appears or does not appear; if he appears he is bound to be heard; if not, the record should be perused and the appeal disposed of on the merits.²

The whole record must be perused; it is not enough to merely go through the judgment.³ But documents and evidence not forming part of the record of the proceedings of the lower Court cannot be referred to or considered in appeal.⁴

An appeal cannot be dismissed on the ground that the sentence of the lower Court is without jurisdiction. Where a Magistrate first passed a non-appealable sentence and then illegally corrected it into an appealable sentence, it was held that an appeal lay against the latter and could not be dismissed on the ground that the original sentence was non-appealable.⁵

4. Dismissal of appeal for default, if can be set aside.—See Notes to Section 430.

5. Refusal to entertain appeal on ground that conviction ought to have been under non-appealable section.—Where a conviction is given under an appealable section, the appeal cannot be refused to be entertained because the conviction, in the appellate Court's opinion, ought to have been under a non-appealable section.¹

Notes 1-2

- (3) In s. 215 of the Code of 1882, the words "under S. 213 or 214" were for the first time introduced and even that section did not contain the words "or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478."
- (4) In the Code of 1898, the words "or by a Court of Session under S. 477 or by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478" were introduced after the word 'Magistrate'.
- (5) The section was amended in 1923. The words "or S. 214" were removed by the Criminal Law Amendment Act, XII of 1923, consequent on the repeal of S. 214. Likewise the words "or by a Court of Session under S. 477" were removed by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923, consequent upon the repeal of S. 477.

2. Scope of the section. — Where a commitment is made —

- (1) under S. 213 by a competent Magistrate, or
- (2) by a Civil or Revenue Court under S. 478, it can be quashed only by the High Court and only on a point of law.¹

When the commitment is not made under S. 213 or S. 478, this section does not apply. Thus, a commitment under S. 437² or by the Appellate Court under S. 423³ or by the High Court under S. 526⁴ is not one under S. 213 and the High Court can, in revision, where such an order of commitment is open to revision, consider the propriety of the order of commitment on points both of law and of fact. An order of commitment under S. 347, however, falls within the purview of S. 213 and can be quashed, if at all, only under this section.⁵

When a commitment is not made by a competent Magistrate, the commitment may be quashed under S. 532, which does not apply when the commitment is made by a competent Magistrate.⁶

The section does not in any way restrict the powers of the High Court to pass any orders subsequent to the quashing of the commitment.⁷ This section does not control S. 494.⁸

6. Admission of appeal does not preclude objection as to its admissibility. — The mere fact that an appeal was admitted in the absence of the respondent does not preclude the appellate Court from entertaining and giving effect, at the hearing, to an objection as to the maintainability of the appeal. Thus, the appellate Court can entertain an objection that there was no sufficient cause under S. 5 of the Limitation Act for excusing the delay in filing the appeal,¹ or an objection that no appeal lies against the particular sentence.² See also section 421 Note 1.

7. Appeal cannot be admitted merely for reviewing sentence. — An appeal cannot be admitted merely for the purpose of reviewing the sentence only. If the appeal is admitted the appellant is entitled to be heard on the merits of the whole case. Where this is not done the High Court will order a re-hearing of the appeal.¹ See also S. 421 Note 1.

8. Withdrawal of appeal. — A petition of appeal presented for admission may be withdrawn by the appellant. The reason is that a right of appeal is a privilege and the party concerned is at liberty to insist upon or abstain from the exercise of that right in accordance with the principle that every privilege given to a party by law may be waived at the option of that party.¹ According to the undermentioned case,² a party can withdraw his appeal at any time before judgment. According to the High Court of Calcutta,³ it is doubtful if an appeal can be withdrawn as of right, after the appellate Court has perused the evidence.

9. Parties must be given an opportunity of being heard. — An appeal cannot be dismissed summarily under this section.¹ The stage at which the powers under this section are to be exercised arises after the notice referred to in S. 422 has been given to the parties specified therein. The appellate Court must give the appellant or his pleader an opportunity of being heard.² It cannot dispose of the appeal immediately after sending for the record without giving any such opportunity.³ Thus, it cannot dismiss the appeal without a hearing on the ground that "the matter is a mere trifle."⁴

On the other hand, where an opportunity has been given, but the appellant or his pleader is absent at the hearing,⁵ or is not prepared to argue,⁶ the Court is not bound to wait further but is competent to dispose of the appeal on the merits after perusing the record. Thus, the only limitation on the powers of the appellate Court is that, before disposing of the appeal, it must peruse the record and, if the appellant, having been given an opportunity of being heard, is present or is represented by a pleader, he must be heard.⁷

Where a pleader appears on behalf of the appellant but files no vakalatnama, the appellate Court may grant him some time for producing the vakalatnama and then hear him; but the refusal to grant time cannot be said to be wrong.⁸ If the appellant is in jail and is unrepresented by a pleader, he is entitled to appear and be heard in person⁹ and, for this purpose, the appellate Court has power to direct him to be brought before it.^{9a} A contrary view has, however, been taken by the Chief Court of Oudh,^{9b} namely that an appellant in jail cannot appear in person in Court.

The only persons that are entitled to be heard are those mentioned in the section. A mukhtear is a pleader, and if he represents the appellant, he must be heard.¹⁰ A complainant or a private prosecutor cannot claim, as of right, to be heard in appeal, though the Court may, in its discretion hear him.¹¹

Section 423
Notes 9-11

The parties who are to be heard, must be heard in each other's presence.¹² The Court cannot cut short the arguments so long as the parties are not guilty of unnecessary repetition or of irrelevant arguments; nor can it decline to hear them or cut short their arguments because it is expected by the superior Courts to turn out a certain amount of work within a certain time.

There is a difference of opinion as to whether, if the respondent is heard, the appellant has a right of reply. According to the High Court of Calcutta¹³ the practice of the Court is to allow the appellant a right of reply. According to the High Court of Lahore¹⁴ there is nothing in the language of the section to preclude the appellant or his pleader from replying, and as a matter of principle such right must be conceded to him. The Chief Court of Oudh¹⁵ has, on the other hand, held that the appellant's pleader has no right of reply but that it is a privilege which should not ordinarily be refused by the Court.

10. Notice of appeal. — See Notes to Section 422.

11. Connected appeals — Hearing of. — An appellate Court should not hear two appeals together; each appeal must be kept absolutely separate and dealt with on the merits.¹ Further, it is irregular for the Court, while dealing with connected criminal appeals, to make cross-references to the evidence and judgments in the several cases.² Where two parties were charged for their attacks against each other in the same occurrence, and the High Court, though trying the two charges separately, gave a single judgment, it was held by the Privy Council, that although technically it would have been better to have kept the evidence entirely distinct and to have given two separate judgments, the irregularity was one which, in the absence of prejudice would not affect the validity of the convictions.³ Where the Sessions Court reversed the finding of the lower Court on a question of fact, without discussing the evidence in the case but referring to his finding in the appeal in a counter-case, it was held that the procedure, though convenient for the Sessions Judge, raised difficulties when the case came before the High Court in revision for want of material for High Court and hence the case should be remanded.⁴

12. Appointment of assessors in appeal. — The appointment of assessors in appeal is not authorized by law.¹

13. New plea. — A plea of self-defence can be raised for the first time in appeal and the appellate Court should examine the plea so raised,¹ if the facts on the record justify such plea.² Similarly, a question of law such as that the prosecution is barred by limitation,³ or that the trial is vitiated by an illegality⁴ (e. g., a misjoinder of charges,⁵ or the constitution of the Court being illegal or irregular^{5a}) may be raised for the first time in appeal. As a general rule, however, an objection as to the admissibility of evidence will not be entertained for the first time in appeal.⁶ Similarly, an objection that the trial ought to have been with the aid of assessors and not by jury will not be entertained for the first time in appeal.⁷

14. Appreciation of evidence by the appellate Court. — The appellate Court should exercise its own independent judgment in reviewing the evidence¹ and must form its own conclusions on the evidence.² A general agreement with the lower Court is not enough.³

A trial Court may give a finding of fact in two ways :

- (a) by drawing inferences from proved and admitted facts, or
- (b) by relying on the credibility of the evidence.

This credibility may again depend upon the demeanour of the witnesses or upon other factors. In case (a), the appellate Court is in as good a position as the first Court. Even in case (b), where the credibility of the evidence depends upon factors other than the demeanour of witnesses, the appellate Court is free to come to its own conclusions as to the credibility of the evidence.^{3a} Similarly, when the trial Court convicts and the appellate Court acquits the accused, the High Court, on appeal by the Government against the acquittal, is not in any worse position than the first appellate Court, in the matter of weighing the evidence.⁴ Where, however, a finding of fact is based upon the credibility of evidence involving the appreciation of the demeanour of witnesses, the view of the trial Court which has seen and heard the witnesses is entitled to great weight and should not be lightly discarded.⁵ In such cases the appellate Court will not interfere unless the manner of appreciating evidence, between an appellate Court and the trial Court.⁷ Where the evidence has been properly appreciated by the lower Court and its view cannot be said to be wrong, the appellate Court cannot interfere.⁸

There is a difference of opinion as to whether the appellant is bound to show that the decision of the lower Court is wrong. On the one hand, it has been held that there is no such burden on the appellant. It is for the appellate Court, as for the first Court, to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the accused has been established beyond all reasonable doubt.⁹ According to this view, the presumption of innocence with which the accused starts, continues right through until he is held guilty by the final Court of Appeal; this presumption is not strengthened by an acquittal or weakened by a conviction in the trial Court: the onus of proof is neither increased nor lightened by an order of conviction or acquittal.¹⁰

On the other hand it has been held in the undermentioned case¹¹ that the presumption is that the lower Court's decision is correct. According to this view, an appellant is not in the same position before an appellate Court as he is before the Court trying him, but must satisfy the appellate Court that there is sufficient ground for interfering.¹² It is submitted that the former view is to be preferred to the latter.

Where the whole of the prosecution evidence is disbelieved, a conviction by the lower Court in respect of two offences cannot be set aside as regards one offence and confirmed as regards the other; the whole of the conviction should be set aside.¹³ Where improper evidence is admitted the appellate Court should see whether, excluding it, there still remains sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction of the lower Court and, if so, it should not interfere.¹⁴ See also section 167 of the Evidence Act.

a judgment of acquittal passed in any criminal Court." This was in accordance with the old established principle of English law that a man once tried and acquitted for an offence is ipso facto protected from any subsequent proceeding for that offence, whether the subsequent proceeding is by the appellate or revisional Court.

On grounds of public policy,¹ however, a right of appeal against an acquittal, subject to certain limitations, was for the first time recognised in this country by the Code of 1872.² An appellate Court will, however, hesitate and feel great reluctance in interfering with the finding of the Court below and coming to a different conclusion.³ Where two views are possible on the evidence, an appellate Court will not interfere merely because it would, sitting as a trial Court, have taken the other view,⁴ unless it is shown that there has been some irregularity in procedure or some other serious defect which necessitates the re-examination of the entire evidence and a fresh conclusion.⁵ Again, where the evidence against the accused is too scanty or insuffi-

Nor will the finding of the trial Court be displaced merely because the Government's view of the case does not coincide with that of the trial Court.⁸

Note 15

Except in regard to the points stated above, there is no distinction drawn, so far as the sections of the Code themselves are concerned, between appeals from convictions and appeals from acquittals in regard to the rules and limitations applicable to them. It was, however, held in several decisions, that a distinction must be drawn as regards the powers of the appellate Court in dealing with an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction.⁹ Thus, it was held that the appellate Court had no jurisdiction to reverse an order of acquittal on a matter of fact except in cases in which the lower Court had "obstinately blundered"¹⁰ or had, through incompetence, stupidity or perversity reached distorted conclusions as to produce a positive miscarriage of justice,¹¹ or had, in some other way, so conducted itself as to produce a miscarriage of justice,¹² or had obviously blundered,¹³ or its judgment was wrong and perverse,¹⁴ or was unreasonable.¹⁵ A contrary view was also expressed in other decisions, namely, that there was no distinction as regards the powers of the appellate Court between an appeal from an acquittal and an appeal from a conviction, and that the only question in each case was whether the conclusions upon the evidence were proper and correct.¹⁶

3. "Once made." — This section refers only to commitments actually made. But where the Sessions Judge acting under s. 477, sets aside the order of discharge and directs a commitment to be made, the High Court can interfere in its revisional jurisdiction and can consider questions of law and fact.¹

4. Under Section 213, etc. — Commitments are authorized by the Code under ss. 213, 379, 346, 347, 348, 423, 437, 439, 445, 462, 478 and 526. As seen in Note 2 above, this section applies only in cases of commitments made under s. 213 or s. 478.

5. Competent Magistrate. — The phrase "competent Magistrate" has been held to include for the purposes of this section —

- (1) a Magistrate to whose file a case has been transferred from that of another Magistrate;¹
- (2) the District Magistrate to whom a case had been transferred under section 349;²
- (3) a Magistrate to whose notice an offence contemplated under s. 195 is brought in a judicial proceeding;³
- (4) a first class Magistrate who had been appointed as a special Magistrate to try the case since he has powers to commit ordinarily under s. 203.⁴

But where a Magistrate who has become disqualified to try a case by virtue of s. 556, holds a preliminary enquiry and commits the case without the leave necessary under that section,⁵ or where a Magistrate holds the enquiry in cases in which a sanction to prosecute is necessary and commits the case without such sanction,⁶ it has been held that the commitment is not by a "competent Magistrate" within the meaning of this section. However, where a case has been pending before a Magistrate, and he has not been restrained from going on with the enquiry by any order staying the proceedings, his jurisdiction to commit is not ousted and he does not cease to be a competent Magistrate merely on the ground that, after the records had been called for by and sent to the superior Court, he took advantage of a short interval when the records were sent to him for the purpose of recording the evidence of a particular witness, and completed the enquiry and committed the accused.⁷

As to the effect of an order of commitment by a Magistrate who has no local jurisdiction over the offence, see Note 9 below and s. 531 Note 2.

The question has now been settled by the Privy Council in Sheo Swarup v. King-Emperor.¹⁷ Lord Russel of Killowen, in delivering the judgment of the Board upholding the latter view, observed as follows :

"There is in their opinion no foundation for the view, apparently supported by the judgments of some Courts in India, that the High Court has no power or jurisdiction to reverse an order of acquittal on a matter of fact, except in cases in which the lower Court has 'obstinately blundered' or has 'through incompetence, stupidity or perversity' reached such 'distorted conclusions as to produce a positive miscarriage of justice', or has in some other way so conducted itself as to produce a glaring miscarriage of justice, or has been tricked by the defence so as to produce a similar result. Sections 417, 418 and 423 of the Code give to the High Court full power to review at large the evidence upon which the order of acquittal was founded, and to reach the conclusion that upon that evidence the order of acquittal should be reversed. No limitation should be placed upon that power, unless it be found expressly stated in the Code. But in exercising the power conferred by the Code and before reaching its conclusions upon fact, the High Court should and will always give proper weight and consideration to such matters as (1) the views of the trial Judge as to the credibility of the witnesses; (2) the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused, a presumption certainly not weakened by the fact that he has been acquitted at his trial;¹⁸ (3) the right of the accused to the acquittal in respect of the major offence, it is open to the accused to ask the Court to consider all the evidence before it and to urge all possible grounds against conviction, and if the Court comes to the conclusion that the conviction even for the lesser offence is wrong, it can suo motu acquit the accused of that offence in the exercise of its powers under section 439.²²

16. Appeal from acquittal — Order for further inquiry. —

It is only in an appeal from an acquittal that the appellate Court can direct a further inquiry.¹ There is no power to order further inquiry in an appeal from a conviction² or from any other order.³ The appellate Court may, if necessary, take additional evidence under section 428.⁴

17. Appeal against acquittal — Power to order re-trial. —

The power to order a re-trial, whether in an appeal from a conviction or from an acquittal, is a discretionary one.¹ A re-trial should be ordered only where the trial is incurably defective so that even the taking of additional evidence under S.428 will not put the appellate Court in a position to dispose of the case satisfactorily.² Thus, where the lower Court had acquitted the accused on a misconception of the law and did not examine the defence witnesses, a re-trial was ordered on setting aside the acquittal.³ Where the evidence disclosed some other offence than that of which the accused was acquitted, it was held that a re-trial might be ordered.⁴

The discretion to order a re-trial will not be exercised, where the case is not of sufficient consequence,⁵ or where there is no evidence on the record sufficient for conviction,⁶ or where no action was taken against the accused for a long time after the offence and the ordering of a re-trial would result in the accused labouring under great difficulties in the conduct of his case,⁷ or where there has already been full inquiry into the facts and no further evidence is likely to be forthcoming.⁸

The fact that evidence had been discovered subsequent to the acquittal is not a ground for setting aside the acquittal or for ordering a re-trial.⁹

An order for re-trial can be passed even subsequent to the order setting aside the conviction and sentence.¹⁰

Where, in an appeal against an order of acquittal, the High Court sets aside the order of acquittal but declines to order re-trial, the prosecution still has power to prosecute the accused for the same offence.¹¹

18. Re-trial of appeals. — An appeal is to all intents and purposes a trial,¹ and consequently the word “re-tried” will include the re-trial of an appeal also. Where a person is acquitted in appeal by the Sessions Judge, the High Court, on an appeal therefrom by the Provincial Government, can after reversing the acquittal, order the appeal to be re-tried.²

19. “Find him guilty and pass sentence.” — The appellate Court, setting aside an order of acquittal, may find the accused guilty of the offence charged, and pass sentence on him according to law.¹ The words “find him guilty” are, however, not limited to the offences of which the accused was accused in the lower Court; the appellate Court may find him guilty of all offences of which the trial Court could have found him guilty under the provisions of Ss. 237 and 238 of the Code, provided, of course, the accused is not prejudiced by the course adopted.² The fact that the trial was with the aid of assessors will not affect the power of the appellate Court to convict the accused for another offence under Ss. 237 and 238, even though the opinion of assessors could not be taken in respect of such offence.³

Where the accused has had no legal trial, he cannot be convicted and sentenced by the appellate Court. The only course open in such a case is to order a retrial.⁴

Where the accused is convicted in appeal, the appellate Court may pass sentence according to law. Where the trial Court convicted the accused and awarded him one year's imprisonment, and on appeal the accused was acquitted, it was held in an appeal against such acquittal, that the High Court, if it set aside the acquittal, had power to pass a severer sentence than that awarded by the trial Court, though it must be within the powers of the trying Magistrate.⁵

Ordinarily in an appeal against an acquittal the appellate Court convicting the accused refrains from passing a capital sentence.⁶

20. Appeal from conviction — General. — In an appeal from a conviction the appellate Court may adopt one of three courses according to the facts and circumstances of the case :

- (1) It may reverse the finding and sentence and acquit or discharge the accused, or order him to be re-tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such appellate Court, or committed for trial.
- (2) It may alter the finding, maintaining the sentence, or with or without altering the finding, reduce the sentence.
- (3) It may alter the nature of the sentence, but, subject to the provisions of S. 106, sub-s. (3), not so as to enhance the same.

It cannot simply remand the case directing that the lower Court should examine certain witnesses afresh and re-submit the record to the appellate Court for decision of the appeal.¹ Nor can it direct a further inquiry to be made.²

Clause (b) cannot be taken to imply that, unless accompanied by a sentence, a conviction such as that under S. 562 of the Code, is not open to appeal; it is unnecessary to regard the section as an exhaustive statement of the powers of an appellate Court.³

21. "Reverse the finding and sentence."—Where an appellate Court reverses the finding and sentence of the lower Court, it must adopt one of the three courses :—

- (1) acquit or discharge the accused, or
- (2) order his re-trial by a Court of competent jurisdiction, or
- (3) order his commitment for trial.

A mere reversal of the conviction without adopting any of these courses amounts to an acquittal of the offence of which the accused was convicted in the trial Court.¹

Before any of these courses is adopted, it is necessary that the findings of the lower Court should be reversed. This reversal, however, does not amount to an acquittal within the meaning of section 403.²

It was held in the undermentioned case³ that where the accused had been convicted of offence X and the appellate Court considered him guilty not only of that offence but also of offence Y, it should confirm the conviction in respect of offence X and direct him to be tried for the other offence also by a Court of competent jurisdiction.

22. "Acquit or discharge the accused."—As has been seen already, an appellate Court reversing the conviction of the accused can acquit or discharge the accused.¹

Where A and B are convicted by the trial Court and B appeals and is acquitted on the merits, it does not follow that A will necessarily have the benefit of the finding of the appellate Court.² Where, however, the grounds of acquittal of B are common to A also, the position is different. In such cases, it has been held that the High Court as a Court of revision is entitled to set aside the conviction of A also, although

Where A is acquitted and B is convicted by the trial Court and B appeals from his conviction, the appellate Court cannot interfere so as to affect the acquittal of A, when there is no appeal against such acquittal.⁶

23. "Order him to be re-tried." — Under the Code of 1872, where the trial Court was not one competent to try the case, the appellate Court was bound to order a re-trial.¹ Under the present section, where the appellate Court reverses the conviction of the accused, it may order him to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction.² The question, whether there should be a re-trial, is thus a matter of judicial discretion of the Court.³ As a general rule, an order for re-trial would be proper where the trial in the lower Court has been illegal, irregular or otherwise defective.⁴ In all serious cases where the first trial, owing to a defect of jurisdiction or other similar cause, is rendered abortive, a new trial should be ordered, unless it is quite clear that, on the materials before the Court, there is no chance of conviction.⁵

It is not, however, in every case, where there has been a defect in the trial, that the appellate Court will order a re-trial. A re-trial will not be ordered —

- (1) where the sentence is a small one, the offence not being a serious one, and the accused has sufficiently suffered in pocket;⁶
- (2) where the evidence is unsatisfactory⁷ and cannot, in any proper view of the case, support a conviction;⁸
- (3) where there is no probability of a conviction even if a re-trial is ordered⁹ and the accused has already been subjected to persecution for a long time;¹⁰

- (4) where the accused has already undergone a considerable portion of the sentence;¹¹
- (5) where the defect consists in the admission of irrelevant evidence, but there is other evidence on the record sufficient to enable the Judge to decide the case;¹²
- (6) where the only defect is that certain evidence has not been brought on the record which ought to have been, the appellate Court may, in such a case, itself take evidence under S. 423 and decide the case.¹³

Where there is no defect in the trial or irregularity in procedure, the mere fact that the appellate Court is unable to form an opinion as to whether the accused is to be convicted or acquitted,¹⁴ or that there is a chance that the prosecution may be able to produce better evidence,¹⁵ or that the appellate Court disagrees with the finding of the lower Court,¹⁶ is not a ground for ordering a re-trial.

Where the appellate Court ordered a new trial on the ground that, although the accused were shown by the evidence to have committed some offence, it was clear they had been convicted under a wrong section, and all the facts on which a conviction for any offence could be sustained had been put in issue before the trying Magistrate,

7. "By the High Court only." — It is only the High Court that can quash a commitment under this section. The committing Magistrate himself cannot after he has once committed the case, quash the commitment and discharge the accused on the ground that the complainant wants either to withdraw or compound the case.¹ Nor can the Sessions Judge to whom a case is committed, quash the commitment and direct a retrial² even if the commitment had been in pursuance of his direction.³ The only course open to the Judge in such cases is to proceed with the trial and acquit the accused if there is no proof of his guilt or if the public prosecutor withdraws the prosecution with the leave of the Court.⁴ But when a Magistrate commits an accused who is a foreign subject for an offence in a foreign territory, the commitment is void ab initio and the Sessions Judge can discharge the accused or refer the matter to the High Court for orders.⁵

The Judicial Commissioner of Sind, sitting in the Sessions Division, is not divested of his dual capacity as a High Court Judge and he can quash commitments under this section even when sitting as a Sessions Judge.⁶ Similarly, a single Judge of the High Court

retrial on a fresh charge framed on the evidence already recorded.²⁰ However, the appellate Court cannot direct that the evidence already on the record should be treated as evidence in the case, as it savours of an order for further inquiry which cannot be passed in appeals from convictions.²¹ An order for re-trial, again, cannot restrict the evidence to be taken to that mentioned in the order; the order should be for re-trial in view of the instructions contained in the order; the accused is entitled to let in such additional evidence as he may desire.²²

Where a re-trial is ordered, it is open to the prosecution either to proceed or not to proceed as it may be advised.²³

Where the circumstances of the case warrant an order for re-trial, the appellate Court should not simply dismiss the appeal or report the case to the High Court.²⁴

tion even where the original Court was itself a Court of competent jurisdiction.³

The Court convicting the accused may be competent to try the case, but not competent to adequately punish the accused for the offence. In such a case, the appellate Court, reversing the conviction, may order a re-trial to be held by a Court which can adequately punish the accused.⁴

There is nothing preventing the appellate Court from specifying the subordinate Court which should hold the re-trial.⁵

Can a re-trial be ordered before the appellate Court itself? There is a difference of opinion on the point. It was held by the High Court of Bombay in the undermentioned case⁶ that the re-trial, if ordered, must be by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to the appellate Court and that the appellate Court could not order the re-trial to proceed before itself. According to the High Court of Madras, the words "Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to such appellate Court" are not words of limitation and do not exclude the appellate Court, if the offence is one within its jurisdiction.⁷

Where, in a case tried by jury in Court X, the appellate Court reversed the conviction and sentence, and ordered a re-trial by Court Y which was competent to try the case with the aid of assessors, it was held by the Privy Council that there was no legal objection to the order made, but that the order was one which ought not to be made, unless justified by exceptional circumstances, inasmuch as it was likely to have very serious effects upon the rights of the accused, and that his privilege which he had enjoyed of a trial by a jury, he ought, in general, to retain.⁸

On the same principle, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that, where a conviction by a jury is set aside on the ground of defective charge to the jury, but there is evidence on record the sufficiency of which must be considered by the jury, the proper course is to order a re-trial by jury.⁹ In the undermentioned case¹⁰ the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind in an appeal against an acquittal

25. Discharge and re-trial—If both can be ordered.—Where the appellate Court discharges an accused person on the ground, for example, of misjoinder of parties, it has power to add a direction that the accused should be re-tried. It is not obligatory on it to leave to the discretion of the Magistrate the course which should be taken in such matter.¹ It was, however, held in the case noted below² that it is not ordinarily the duty of the appellate Court to order the re-trial of a person whose conviction is set aside, and that the prosecution may be left to take such proceedings against the accused as they may be advised to take.

26. Effect of re-trial on offences of which accused had been acquitted in trial Court.—Suppose A is charged with having committed offences X and Y but is convicted of offence X only and on appeal the conviction is reversed and a re-trial ordered. Is the whole case re-opened and is A to be re-tried on both charges X and Y? Yes, if the facts of the case are such that the offences X and Y fall within S. 236 of the Code.¹ Where the accused is charged at one trial with distinct offences constituted by distinct acts and he is acquitted of one of such offences and convicted of the other, an order for re-trial in an appeal against the conviction will not re-open the whole case.²

Where A was charged in the trial Court with offences under ss. 302 and 201 of the Penal Code and was convicted under S. 302, the charge under S. 201 being withdrawn by the prosecution, it was held on appeal from the conviction that the appellate Court could order a re-trial even in respect of the offence under S. 201, since there was no acquittal on that charge.³

27. Ordering re-trial for enhancing sentence. — The power of ordering a new trial merely for the purpose of enhancing the punishment ought to be very sparingly used.¹ It ought not to be used at all where the trial Court was competent to inflicting the maximum punishment for the offence.²

28. Remand for passing sentence or for writing proper judgment. — An appellate Court cannot remand the case to the lower Court for the purpose of passing a legal sentence; it must deal with the matter itself in accordance with law.¹ Similarly, in *Tara Chand v. Emperor*² it was held that an appellate Court had no power to remand a case for "re-hearing the parties and writing out a proper judgment," but that it was its duty to go into the whole facts fully itself and dispose of the case. In In re Karupiah Pillai,³ where the trial Court had not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of S. 367, it was held that the correct procedure for the appellate Court to adopt was to accept the appeal and remand the case for re-hearing de novo and not to retain the case on file, merely calling for a fresh judgment from the lower Court.

29. Effect of order for re-trial in appeal. — Where the Sessions Judge as an appellate Court orders a re-trial in an appeal against the conviction of a first class Magistrate, the District Magistrate has no authority to disregard the same and release the prisoner.¹

30. "Or committed for trial." — An appellate Court reversing the conviction of the lower Court can order a commitment to be made in cases where the accused ought to be committed.¹ There was no such power before the Code of 1882.²

Where a Magistrate convicts the accused of an offence which is exclusively triable by a Court of Session and the appellate Court reverses the finding and orders a commitment, it is not necessary that the Magistrate should commence a fresh inquiry and take evidence de novo. The inquiry and the evidence at the trial are sufficient for the purposes of commitment.³

The words "order him to be committed for trial" do not necessarily mean that the appellate Court cannot itself make the commitment, but should direct a Magistrate to do so. Both courses are open to the appellate Court.⁴

Where the appellate Court reverses the finding of the lower Court (Magistrate) on the ground that the offence is one exclusively triable by a Court of Session, the proper course to be adopted is to direct a commitment and not simply alter the charge into one for which the accused ought to have been committed and alter the sentences⁵ or try the case itself on such charge. Thus, where the appellate Court reversed a conviction for an offence under S. 376 on the ground that the act could not be said to be without the consent of the girl and was of opinion that the offence made out was one under S. 366 (offence triable exclusively by a Court of Session), but instead of directing a commitment, framed a charge under S. 366 and tried the case itself, it was held that it had no power to do so.⁶

It is not necessary that, in order that the appellate Court may direct a committal, the offence should be one exclusively triable by a Court of Session.⁷ Where A was convicted by a Magistrate under S. 326 of the Penal Code for having cut off his wife's nose and punished with imprisonment for two years, the High Court considered that the case was one which ought to have been committed, though the offence was not one exclusively triable by a Court of Session.⁸

Where a conviction was set aside on the ground that the case was one exclusively triable by a Court of Session and had been tried by the Magistrate without jurisdiction, the High Court refused to make an order for commitment in view, inter alia, of the considerable expense which the accused had been put to in the conduct of the case.⁹

31. "Alter the finding." — The appellate Court may, under clause (b) of the section, alter the finding of the lower Court without ordering a re-trial. This power, however, must be taken to be limited by the general principle that the appellate Court cannot come to any finding which the lower Court could not have legally come to; the meaning of the section must be taken to be that the appellate Court is given the power to correct any mistakes of finding which the first Court may have committed.¹ Thus, an appellate Court cannot, in a case not falling within s. 237 of the Code, convict the accused of a graver offence than that charged.²

Where A is charged in the lower Court with having committed offences X and Y and is acquitted of X, the appellate Court may, in an appeal against the conviction for offence Y, alter the conviction to one for offence X of which A had been acquitted in the lower Court.³ The same principle will apply with greater force, where A had not been expressly acquitted or convicted of offence X, but had simply been convicted of offence Y.⁴ But it has been held in the undermentioned decisions^{4a} that it is not open to the appellate Court under this clause to alter the finding to one of conviction for an offence of which the accused has been acquitted. These decisions purport to follow the decision of the Privy Council in *Kishan Singh v. Where A was charged with having committed offence X only, but the lower Court could, under the provisions of S. 237 or S. 238, have convicted the accused without a charge of offence Y also, the appellate Court can, in an appeal against the conviction for offence X, alter the conviction to one for offence Y.⁵ But can an appellate Court alter the finding in stated, that an appellate Court cannot come to any finding which the trial Court could not have come to. If the appellate Court considers that the accused is guilty of another offence than that charged, it should direct a re-trial with directions to alter the charge.^{6a} It is conceived that it may also frame a fresh charge itself on the analogy of S. 227, and proceed, after notice to the accused, to dispose of the case. This, however, should not be done if it is likely to prejudice the accused.⁷

In some cases, however, it has been held that the appellate Court can, where the facts are the same, alter the conviction from one under a wrong section to one under the proper section, if it does not prejudice the accused.⁸ It has also been held in the cases cited below,^{8a} that the only restriction on the appellate Court's power is that the accused is not prejudiced by the alteration of the charge and that the appellate Court could alter the finding, even though the case does not fall within S. 237 or S. 238. It is submitted that this view cannot be supported on principle. Section 233 of the Code provides that every distinct offence must be separately charged, though where a trial does take place without a charge, it is a curable irregularity under S. 535. This principle applies equally to the appellate Court as well as to the trial Court,⁹ and there is nothing to show that the appellate Court can disregard the rule any more than the trial Court. Though the words "may alter the finding" in the section are general, they must be construed in harmony with other provisions of the Code and not as overriding them.^{9a}

The word "finding" is not limited to a finding upon a point of law as distinct from a finding upon a point of fact.^{9b}

exercising original criminal jurisdiction has jurisdiction to quash a commitment made to that Court under this section.⁷

Section 215
Notes 7-8

The principles laid down in s. 537 should generally guide the High Court in dealing with an application under this section.⁸

8. "On a point of law." — A commitment can be quashed only on a point of law.¹ The test is to see from the judgment of the Magistrate what his findings on the evidence are and whether those findings are capable prima facie of sustaining the charges he has framed and on which the commitment to the Court of Session is made.² A commitment should only be quashed when on the face of it there is something of the nature of a fatal flaw in the prosecution.³ In dealing with an application under this section, the High Court is not required to appreciate the evidence, but it proceeds on the assumption that the facts as stated in the order of commitment will be proved at the trial. All that the High Court is required to apply its mind to is to see whether, assuming the facts are proved, they do justify the conviction of the accused or not.^{3a} The following are illustrative instances of errors of law justifying the quashing of the commitment:

- (1) Where the commitment is made without any enquiry or examination of the prosecution witness⁴ or on an enquiry so imperfect as to result in prejudice to the accused.^{4a}
- (2) Where the charge framed is altered or added to at a late stage and the commitment is made without re-examining the witnesses as

Notes 31-33

Charge for substantive offence—Conviction by appellate Court for abetment—As has been seen before, a conviction for offence X can be altered to one for offence Y if, on the facts of the case, the accused could have been convicted of offence Y without a charge by the lower Court under the provisions of Ss. 237 and 238. The abetment of an offence is not a minor offence and cannot come under S. 238.¹¹ But it may come under S. 237, if there is no element in it which is not included in the charge for the substantive offence. In such a case, the accused may be convicted in appeal for abetment of the offence.¹² See also S. 236 Note 8.

32. Reduction of sentence.—Where the appellate Court rejects the appeal summarily under S. 421, it cannot reduce the sentence.¹ Nor can it, while affirming the conviction, reverse the sentence absolutely inasmuch as every conviction must be followed by a sentence. If it thinks the sentence severe, it must pass at least a nominal sentence.²

An appellate Court has power to reduce the sentence,³ but not to remit any sentence—a function which belongs to the Government.⁴

Where A and B are co-accused and A alone appeals, the appellate Court can, in the ends of justice, reduce the sentence passed on B.⁵

33. “Alter the nature of the sentence . . . but not so as to enhance the same. — Under the Code of 1861, the appellate Court had no power to enhance the sentence passed by the lower Court.¹

Section 423
Note 33

Under the Code of 1872, s. 280, as amended by Act XI of 1874, the appellate Court could enhance such sentence.² Under the Code of 1882 and the present Code such power does not exist.^{2a}

There is a great difference of opinion as to whether particular sentences passed by the appellate Court are enhancements of the sentences passed by the first Court. Thus, the following views have been expressed :

- (1) A sentence of fine and in default x months' imprisonment is a lighter sentence than a sentence merely of x months' imprisonment.³ A contrary view has been held in the undermentioned cases,⁴ namely that it is really an enhancement inasmuch as even if the x months' imprisonment is fully served out, the fine nevertheless continues to be leviable in other ways from the accused.
- (2) A sentence of six months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1000 and in default three months' imprisonment, in substitution of a sentence of nine months' imprisonment is not an enhancement.⁵ The case will be different if the imprisonment in default added to the substantive sentence of imprisonment exceeds the original imprisonment awarded.⁶
- (3) Where x is convicted of robbery, but the appellate Court rejects the evidence as to violence and finds x guilty only of theft, the maintaining of the same sentence as was awarded for robbery would be an enhancement. Where X is convicted of theft in a 'building' but the appellate Court finds him guilty of simple theft by putting a different construction upon the word 'building,' both the Courts are at one as to the act committed and differ as to the application of the law. In the latter case, the alteration of the conviction to one of theft and maintaining the sentence is not an enhancement of the sentence. In other words, the alteration of an offence to a less grave offence, but maintaining the sentence, is not an enhancement when the act committed is held to be the same, but the alteration is due to a different interpretation of the law.⁷

- (4) Where the appellate Court passes a sentence which the lower Court has no power to pass, there is an enhancement of the sentence.⁸
- (5) Where the accused, convicted of two offences, is acquitted as regards one of such offences, the maintainance of the whole punishment, awarded for the two offences, amounts to an enhancement.⁹ The reason alleged for this view is that when a single sentence is awarded for two offences, part of it must be deemed to be for one offence and part for the other, so that the maintaining of the whole sentence for one only of the offences is an enhancement.¹⁰ A contrary view has been expressed in the cases below.^{10a}

The real solution of the conflict lies in recognising the fact that the question whether a sentence has been enhanced is a question of fact to be determined in each particular case with reference to the facts of that case.¹⁹ The proper test is whether the accused considers the substituted sentence heavier than that awarded.²⁰ Thus, a substitution of three days' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 100 fine and in default one month's rigorous imprisonment may not be an enhancement if the convict does not consider the fine of Rs. 100 too heavy to pay.²¹

Where the accused were convicted by the Magistrate under ss. 363 and 498, Penal Code, but were sentenced under s. 363 only and subsequently in appeal were found guilty under s. 498 only, it was held that the appellate Court could pass appropriate sentence under s. 498 provided such sentence did not exceed that passed by the trial Court.²² not an enhancement of the sentence.²⁴ As to whether an order for costs under S. 31 of the Court-fees Act is an enhancement of sentence, see S. 546A Note 3.

The provision against enhancement of sentence in this clause applies only to a convicted person. It does not, therefore, preclude the award of rigorous instead of simple imprisonment to a person who has been bound over under chapter VIII but who has failed to give the required security.²⁵

34. "Appeal from any other order"—Clause (c).—Clause (c) applies to an appeal from "any other order," i. e., any other order than an order of acquittal or of conviction.¹ Thus, appeals from orders under S. 514^{1a} or S. 476² or S. 135³ can be dealt with under this clause. In an appeal under sub-s.(3) of S. 250, the appellate Court can, under this clause, set aside the order for compensation though it cannot set aside the acquittal.⁴

The only orders that can be passed in appeals from orders not being acquittals or convictions are those specified in this clause, namely, alteration or reversal of the order of the lower Court, and those specified in clause (d), namely, amendment, or consequential or incidental orders.⁵ Thus, in an appeal against an order under S. 118, a *further inquiry*⁶ or a *re-trial*⁷ cannot be ordered.

The word "alter" in clause (c), though literally may include an alteration increasing the severity of the penalty, cannot be so construed; the whole tenor of the section shows that the Court has no power, by alteration, to increase the severity of the penalty imposed by the trial Court.⁸

Subsequent events — Power to take notice of. — An appellate Court has to look to the offence as charged, and the conviction should not be disturbed because it thinks that, owing to subsequent events, the parties may have committed another offence.¹ Thus, facts which happened subsequent to the conviction or verdict cannot be utilised for the purpose of altering the verdict or of reducing the sentence.²

Clause (d) deals with orders to be passed after the appeal has been heard and cannot apply to matters that may arise pending appeal, such as the release of the appellant on bail.² Nor can it apply to matters at the stage of admission of the appeal. Thus, an order cannot be passed under this clause excusing the delay in filing an appeal after limitation, inasmuch as the application of this section is legitimate only after the preliminary stage indicated in Ss. 421 and 422 has been passed, i. e., after the appeal is validly admitted.³ It has, however, been held in the case cited below^{3a} that an order dispensing with security by a person convicted under S. 107 of the Code can be passed pending appeal as an incidental order under clause (d). It is submitted that this is not correct. Clause (d) should be construed along with the first portion of the section which makes it clear that an order under clause (d) can be passed only after perusing the record and hearing the appeal.

Whether a particular order is "consequential or incidental" depends on the terms of the order under consideration in each particular case and the circumstances in which it is made.⁴

In Mehi Singh v. Mangal Khanda,⁵ a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta observed as follows:

"'Consequential or incidental' orders, within the purview of the provision, must fall under one or other of the two heads :

First, there are orders which follow as a matter of course, being the necessary complements to the main order passed without which the latter would be incomplete or ineffective. Such are directions as to the refund of fines realized from acquitted appellants, or, on the reversal of acquittals, as to the restoration of compensation paid under section 250 ; and for them no separate authority is needed. Secondly, there are orders which, though ancillary in character, require more than the support of a criminal Court's inherent jurisdiction, and could not be passed without express authority."

The principle in Mehi Singh's case was followed by the Allahabad High Court in the undermentioned case.⁶ The Rangoon High Court⁷ has, however, dissented from it.

The following have all been held to be "consequential" or "incidental" orders within the meaning of clause (d) :

- (1) An order for costs under S. 148, sub-s. (3) is incidental to an order for possession under S. 145.⁸

- (2) An order under S. 517 for restoration of property to the person entitled may be passed as a consequential or incidental order.⁹
- (3) An order under S. 520: see Notes to S. 520.
- (4) Where a member of a Bench of Magistrates has not signed the judgment, the appellate Court can, as an incidental order, send the case back to him for such signature.¹⁰
- (5) An order under S. 81 of the Court-fees Act (now S. 546A, Criminal Procedure Code) can be passed as an incidental order.¹¹
- (6) An order under S. 471 of the Code is incidental to an order of acquittal on the ground of insanity.¹²
- (7) An order sending a case back for re-hearing can be passed under this clause.¹³
- (8) An order directing refund of compensation on the setting aside of an order for compensation is a consequential or incidental order within clause (d).¹⁴

Before the present Code, there was no provision corresponding to clause (d) of this section and it was held on the language of S. 250, that it was the Magistrate by whom the case was heard that could pass an order under that section and not an appellate Court.¹⁵ The introduction of clause (d) would appear to make a difference. It has, however, been held that an order under S. 250 is not 'consequential' or 'incidental' to an order of discharge or acquittal and cannot be passed by the appellate Court under this clause.¹⁶ See also S. 250 Note 6.

The following orders have been held not to be within clause (d):

- (1) Order as to costs of the *appeal itself*¹⁷ or of the adjournment of the appeal.¹⁸
- (2) Order setting aside an order under S. 31 of the Court-fees Act¹⁹ (now S. 546A, Criminal Procedure Code.)

40. Verdict of jury — Sub-section (2). — Section 418 provides that an appeal in jury cases is limited to questions of law.¹ This sub-section provides that an appellate Court cannot alter or reverse the verdict of a jury unless such verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by the Judge or to a misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by him.^{1a} This sub-section should not, however, be construed as controlling S. 418 and as laying down that no question of law can be taken in appeal unless there is a misdirection by the Judge or a misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by him. Where the trial is illegal in fact, it may be set aside for that reason only and

The admission of inadmissible evidence and the rejection of admissible evidence during the trial are questions of law. Where the Judge in his charge to the jury puts inadmissible evidence before the jury or fails to warn them against considering such evidence, there will be a misdirection which will, subject to the provisions of S. 537, form a ground of interference in appeal.⁶ Where inadmissible evidence has been admitted during the trial, but there has been no misdirection, it will nevertheless be an error of law and will, subject to the provisions of S. 537, be a ground of appeal.^{6a}

Where a verdict is set aside on the ground of misdirection or error of law, the appellate Court should ordinarily direct a re-trial⁷ though where the Court is satisfied that the evidence is wholly insufficient to support the conviction,⁸ or where the accused has been sufficiently harassed by repeated trials,⁹ it may discharge or acquit the accused. But can the Court go into the evidence and decide upon the facts whether, upon the merits, the decision is right and, if so, confirm the conviction notwithstanding a misdirection or an error of law?

In Wafadar Khan v. Queen Empress,¹⁰ it was held by the High Court of Calcutta that it was not open to the appellate Court to do so; the word "erroneous" according to that decision is not to be read as meaning "wrong on facts," but as meaning that the verdict had been vitiated and rendered bad or defective by reason of a misdirection or a misunderstanding of the law. The appellate Court cannot determine for itself whether the verdict, as a conclusion of fact, is right or wrong, as, to hold otherwise would be to substitute the decision of the Court for the verdict of the jury. In Romesh Chandra v. Emperor,¹¹ where inadmissible evidence had been received but there was no misdirection, it was held that the misreception of evidence was likely to have adversely affected the appellant, that the verdict must be set aside on the ground of an error of law, and that a re-trial only should be ordered. Referring to s. 167 of the Evidence Act, which runs as follows:

"The improper admission or rejection of evidence shall not be ground of itself for a new trial or reversal of any decision in any case, if it shall appear to the Court before which such objection is raised, that, independently of the evidence objected to and admitted, there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision, or that, if the rejected evidence had been received, it ought not to have varied the decision,"

it was observed that the section merely says that the improper admission of evidence is not a "ground of itself" for interference, that the fact that the trial is by a jury is another factor to be taken into account, that the appellate Court cannot say on the principle of Wafadar Khan's case that there is other evidence which would justify the decision, and cannot confirm the decision unless it is satisfied that the verdict of the jury would have been the same if no evidence had been wrongly received. has, in Ikramuddin v. Emperor^{11a} followed the view of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in Wafadar Khan's case, and has held that an appellate Court has no power to look at the evidence and find the accused guilty of any offence with which he was not charged in the trial Court and which was not laid before the jury. The High Court of Bombay has, on the other hand, held that, where a verdict of the jury is vitiated by a misdirection or a misreception of evidence, the appellate Court has power to convict or acquit the accused as the evidence, according to its own view, is or is not sufficient for conviction or, where the facts have to be determined and the evidence is of such a character as to render it difficult to pronounce any opinion on its character without hearing the witnesses, to order a new trial.¹² A similar view has been taken by the High Courts of Madras¹³ and Lahore^{13a} and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Nagpur¹⁴ and Sind.¹⁵ The Calcutta High Court also held a similar view in the undermentioned decisions.¹⁶

There is no specific provision in the Code that repugnancy in the verdict of the jury is, as in English law, by itself, a sufficient ground for quashing a conviction. The powers under S. 423 have, however, been held to be large enough to invoke the application of the English law rule inasmuch as it is a rule of practice based upon natural and substantial justice.¹⁷

1. Legislative changes. — This section was first introduced in the Code of 1882; there has been no amendment to it since.

Even before the enactment of this section, the High Courts had insisted on the appellate Courts writing a proper reasoned judgment, when an appeal was dismissed.¹

2. Scope and object of the section. — The object of the section is twofold, firstly, to produce uniformity in procedure and to ensure that judgments of subordinate criminal Courts are written in such a way as to promote public confidence in their decisions and to safeguard them against the possible suggestion that cases are disposed of without proper consideration¹ and secondly to enable the High Court in revision to grasp the nature of the case without reference to the records.² The High Court in criminal revision as a rule depends mainly upon the findings arrived at by the lower appellate Courts on questions of evidence. It is, therefore, the duty of such Courts to see that their judgments are self-contained and give a full analysis of the evidence.³

Where an appellate Court merely says that it has very carefully gone through the records of the case and dismisses the appeal without a discussion of the evidence or without giving reasons, the assurance of the appellate Court can hardly be considered as a substitute for the judicial determination of the questions of evidence involved in the case. Such a judgment is not likely to inspire confidence in the trial of appeals in Courts below.⁴

This section applies only when an appeal is admitted and heard under S. 423 but not where it is summarily rejected under S. 421 of the Code.⁵ See also S. 421, Note 7.

The provisions of this section have been held to apply to appeals

What the appellate judgment should contain. — The appellate judgment should comply so far as may be practicable with the provisions of S. 367.¹ Thus, the appellate judgment should contain, among other things, the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision.² There is a difference of opinion on the question whether, when the appellate Court agrees with the judgment of the lower Court and dismisses an appeal, it is sufficient merely to state in the appellate judgment: "I have considered the evidence, and I agree with the Magistrate in his conclusions and in his reasons;" one set of cases holding that it is sufficient,³ another set of cases holding that it is not sufficient⁴ and a third set of cases holding that it may be sufficient in a simple case but not in a complicated case.⁵

The true test, would, however, appear to be really to see whether the judgment indicates that the appellate Court has really and not nominally considered the case and arrived at an independent judgment.⁶ It is not necessary for the appellate Court to write a long and elaborate judgment⁷ or repeat in extenso all that has been stated by the trial Court.⁸ The judgment should, however, be independent and self-contained so that the High Court in revision may be able to follow it without reference to the trial Court's judgment.⁹

should also be stated.²³ The appellate Court should record a definite finding as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.^{23a}

Case of each accused should be considered. — Where there are more than one accused the appellate Court should discuss the evidence against each accused and give its finding as to the guilt or innocence of each accused.²⁴

Court bound to consider the case on merits even when accused is absent. — When the appeal is once admitted it cannot be disposed of summarily. If the appellant or his pleader is absent, it is still the duty of the appellate Court to go through the record and write a judgment in accordance with law.²⁵ A judgment stating "No one appears; I see no reason to interfere. I dismiss the appeal," has been held to be not a proper judgment.²⁶

(In this case the judgment was, "Appellant absent, waited till 12 noon; I see no reason to interfere with the judgment of the lower Court.")

It has been held that even where the counsel for appellant does not refer to the defence evidence the Court should consider it and give a decision.²⁷

Miscellaneous. — The appellate Court should give to the accused the benefit of doubt, if, on going through the records, it has reasonable doubts about the guilt of the accused.²⁸

The judgment should be temperate, sober and not satirical.²⁹ The Court should not give inconsistent findings.³⁰ It is irregular to consider evidence not properly placed before the Court.³¹

As to the power of the appellate Court to raise a plea of private defence on behalf of the accused when he has not himself raised the point in the lower Courts, see the undermentioned case.³²

An appellate judgment should not impute motives to the Judge or Magistrate whose judgment is under appeal.³³

8. Who can pronounce judgment. — There is nothing in this Code corresponding to O. 20, R. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code. Where, after the hearing of a criminal appeal the Judge was transferred and he subsequently wrote the judgment and forwarded the same to his successor who pronounced it, it was held that the judgment was passed without jurisdiction and should be set aside.¹

As to whether judgments can be dictated, see S. 367 Note 3.

9. "Other than a High Court." — The provisions of this section apply only to subordinate Courts and not to the judgment of a High Court; the High Court can undoubtedly dismiss an appeal without giving reasons.¹ There is no provision in the Code requiring the High

425.* (1) Whenever a case is decided on appeal by the High Court under this Chapter, it shall certify its judgment or order to the Court by which the finding, sentence or order appealed against was recorded or passed. If the finding, sentence or order was recorded or passed by a Magistrate other than the District Magistrate, the certificate shall be sent through the District Magistrate.

(2) The Court to which the High Court certifies its judgment or order shall thereupon make such orders as are conformable to the judgment or order of the High Court; and, if necessary, the record shall be amended in accordance therewith.

426.† (1) Pending any appeal by a convicted person, the Appellate Court may, for reasons to be recorded by it in writing, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended and, also, if he is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond.

(2) The power conferred by this section on an Appellate Court may be exercised also by the High Court in the case of any appeal by a convicted person to a Court subordinate thereto.

(3) When the appellant is ultimately sentenced to imprisonment, penal servitude or transportation, the time during which he is so released shall be excluded in computing the term for which he is so sentenced.

1. Scope of the section. — This section provides for the suspension of sentences pending appeal and for release of the appellant on bail. In Queen-Empress v. Pohpi,¹ Young, J., observed as follows :

"Section 426 of the Criminal Procedure Code provides a procedure by which the appellate Court may, for special reason, order that the execution of the sentence or order appealed against be suspended ; and if the appellant is in confinement, that he be released on bail or on his own bond. Such special provision is provided for special circumstances only and therefore is not generally applicable to all cases, seeing that in many cases (as in the case now under consideration) the appellant is in jail under a legal warrant, and cannot appear in any Court until such warrant is set aside, and such warrant can be set aside only under some special provision such as that referred to in the special cases to which S. 426, Criminal Procedure Code, alludes."

2. "Pending an appeal." — The pendency of an appeal by a convicted person is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction under this section.¹

3. "A convicted person." — It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad¹ and Patna² that the words "convicted person" mean persons convicted of an offence and that this section would be inapplicable to the case of persons who are bound over.

4. "Appellate Court." — The only Courts which have power to suspend the execution of a sentence or order under this section are the appellate Court and the High Court.¹ So a sentence cannot be suspended by the Court which passed it² or a Court to which the appeal does not lie.³ It has been held that the Privy Council, in an application for leave to appeal to itself, is not a Court of criminal appeal, and cannot stay execution of the sentence.⁴

5. "Sentence." — An order of detention by a District Magistrate under S.10 of the Reformatory Schools Act in lieu of a sentence of imprisonment is not a sentence within the meaning of this section. An appellate Court, therefore, has no power to suspend operation of such order.¹

5a. Suspension of sentence. — An order of suspension of sentence should only be passed when very special cause is shown, for the result of suspension of sentence is that if the appeal finally fails, the convicted person only serves the original period of his sentence less the period of suspension.¹ See Note 8.

6. Release on bail. — Under the Code of 1861, a convicted person could be released on bail, only if the offence of which he was convicted was a bailable offence.¹ But now, the appellate Court can release the accused on bail whether the offence is bailable or not.² See also sections 496 to 498.

7. High Court — Sub-section (2). — Sub-section (2) confers on the High Court the same powers as it confers on an appellate Court. The High Court can exercise this power, even after the appellate Court rejects an application under this section, though in such cases it would exercise it only if the order of the appellate Court is manifestly wrong or where no discretion has been exercised at all. The High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers it ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower appellate Courts.¹

Notes 7-8

On the question whether the High Court can suspend the execution of sentence² or grant bail³ pending the hearing of an appeal to the Privy Council, against its own sentence, it has been held that it can do so under its inherent jurisdiction under S. 561A.

8. Exclusion of time — Sub-section (3). — Under sub-s. (3), when the appeal fails, the time during which the accused is released under this section should be excluded in computing the term of which he is sentenced. But it is only when he is released and not where his sentence has been suspended that the term is to be excluded.¹

The sub-section does not mean that the period during which a person is released under this section should be excluded from the term of punishment to which he has been sentenced. What the sub-section means is that in calculating the term, the period of release should be left out of account.²

427.* When an appeal is presented under section 417, the High Court may issue a warrant directing that the accused be arrested and brought before it or any subordinate Court, and the Court before which he is brought may commit him to prison pending the disposal of the appeal, or admit him to bail.

428.* (1) In dealing with any appeal under this Chapter, the Appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence to be necessary, shall record its reasons, and may either take such evidence itself, or direct it to be taken by a Magistrate, or, when the Appellate Court is a High Court, by a Court of Session or a Magistrate.

(2) When the additional evidence is taken by the Court of Session or the Magistrate, it or he shall certify such evidence to the Appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

(3) Unless the Appellate Court otherwise directs, the accused or his pleader shall be present when the additional evidence is taken; but such evidence shall not be taken in the presence of jurors or assessors.

Code of 1872 : S. 282, paras. 1, 3 and 4.

282. In any case in which an appeal has been allowed, the appellate Court, if it thinks further inquiry or additional evidence upon any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the appellant to be necessary, may either make such further inquiry and take such additional evidence itself, or may direct such inquiry to be made and additional evidence to be taken.

When the evidence has not been taken before itself, the result of the further inquiry and the additional evidence shall be certified to the appellate Court, and such Court shall thereupon proceed to dispose of the appeal.

Unless the appellate Court otherwise directs, the presence of the appellant may be dispensed with when the further inquiry is made or evidence taken.

Code of 1861 : S. 422.

422. In any case in which an appeal has been allowed, it shall be competent to the appellate Court, if it think further enquiry or additional evidence upon any point bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the accused to be necessary, to direct such enquiry to be made and additional evidence to be taken. The result of the further enquiry and the additional evidence shall be certified to the appellate Court, and the appellate Court shall thereupon proceed to pass such judgment, sentence, or order as to such Court shall seem right.

in language between the two sections the decisions passed under the Civil Procedure Code are not a trustworthy guide in interpreting this section.^{1a} In this Code itself there are other sections which empower Courts to take additional evidence. See sections 540, 375 and 439.

The object of the section is to see that justice is done between the prosecutor and the person prosecuted.² The object is also "the prevention of a guilty person's escape through some careless or ignorant proceedings of a Magistrate or the vindication of a wrongfully accused person's innocence, where the same carelessness or ignorance has omitted to record circumstances essential to the elucidation of truth."³ In Varadarajulu v. Emperor,⁴ Wallis, C. J., observed :

"It would not be creditable to the administration of justice or in accordance with modern ideas on the subject that a conviction or a charge if otherwise sustainable should be upset owing to a misconception on the part of the prosecution as to the proper mode of proving a statutory requisite [sanction of the Local Government under S. 196], not affecting the merits, a misconception which was shared by the trial Magistrate."

Another reason for the enactment of this section is to save public time by taking only the additional evidence necessary instead of remanding the whole case for examining once again the witnesses already examined.⁵

The additional evidence can be taken in appeals against conviction or appeals against acquittal.⁶ It can be taken for the prosecution or for the defence.⁷ Section 307 provides that the High Court has, in proceedings under that section, all the powers of an appellate Court. The High Court can, therefore, on a reference under S. 307, call for further evidence under this section.⁸

Section 439 also provides specifically that the High Court in revision may exercise the powers under this section.⁹

3. "Appeal under this Chapter." — The powers under this section can be exercised only where, firstly there is an appeal and, secondly the appeal is one under this Chapter (chapter XXXI). A proceeding under S. 125 of the Code is not an appellate proceeding and consequently this section does not apply.¹ A proceeding under S. 437 of the Code is one in revision and this section has no application to such a proceeding also.² An appeal under S. 476B of the Code is one under chapter XXXV and not under this Chapter and consequently this section does not apply.³ It has, however, been held in the under-mentioned cases⁴ that independently of this section the appellate Court in an appeal under S. 476B, has an inherent power to itself take evidence and complete an enquiry which it finds to be incomplete. See also section 476B Note 4.

An appeal under S. 250, sub-s. (3), must be considered to be one under this chapter inasmuch as the forum of such an appeal is to be ascertained only by virtue of the provisions of this chapter; the appellate Court may, therefore, record additional evidence in such cases.⁵

It has been held by the Oudh Chief Court that in an appeal to the Sessions Court from the judgment of an Assistant Sessions Judge, the former has no power under this section to record additional evidence or to direct such evidence to be taken and that the language of sub-s. (1) shows that it is only when a Sessions Court is sitting to hear an appeal from a judgment of a Magistrate that it has got such power.^{5a}

It has been held in the undermentioned case⁶ that S. 4 of Act XI of 1846 read with R. 44 of the Rules under that Act, empowers the High Court to resort to this section in appeals against convictions by the

4. "If it thinks additional evidence to be necessary." — It has been held in the undermentioned cases,¹ that the power to take additional evidence should not be exercised for the purpose of filling a gap in the prosecution case when the necessary evidence was available to the prosecution at the hearing and ought to have been produced then. In Varadarajulu Naidu v. Emperor,² Wallis, C. J., has held that action can be taken under this section to supply a defect in formal proof but that before additional evidence is allowed the Court should be satisfied that the case is one of formal proof only. In the cases cited below,³ it has been held that it is not correct to hold that the provisions of the section are to be invoked only for supplying formal proof. In Akhtar Hussain v. Emperor,⁴ Macpherson, J., observed as follows:

"In India the onus is placed on the Court not merely to listen to the evidence, but to inquire to the utmost into the truth of the matter, and so to secure justice. Accordingly if any restriction is to be placed upon the power conferred on the appellate Court by S. 428, it certainly cannot be that negligence or inadvertence on the part of the prosecution is to be allowed to effect a miscarriage of justice: on the contrary the enactment is, like the other provisions referred to, directed to the attainment of justice even at a late stage in the proceedings, by the introduction of further materials which the Court judges to be essential to a just decision of case. The conditions for the exercise of the power are set out in the section itself, and within these limits it is contemplated that the power will be exercised . . .

the appellate Court is by no means condemned to countenance a miscarriage of justice because the prosecutor or even the trial Court fails to realize the necessity of bringing certain evidence on the record, even if that evidence is not purely formal."

In the undermentioned Madras case⁵ it has been explained that the word "necessary" does not import that it is impossible to pronounce judgment without the additional evidence. There may be many cases where judgment can be pronounced without any additional evidence, but there are cases where it is necessary as a general measure of justice to record additional evidence.

The necessity for taking additional evidence under this section must be determined on the particular facts of each case.⁶ But it has been held that the necessity for additional evidence must be apparent from the record in the case and must not be derived from external information.^{6a} The discretion vested in the Court of appeal should not be exercised arbitrarily⁷ but only when the interests of justice demand such a procedure.⁸

No hard and fast rule can, however, be laid down. The appellate Court will not exercise the power under this section when there is no evidence at all; but where there is some prima facie evidence bearing upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, the appellate Court may act under this section.⁹

It has been held in the following cases that the taking of additional evidence is not an improper exercise of discretion :

- (1) Where the trial Court fails to call witnesses who are known to be in a position to speak to important relevant facts but who have not been called by either party.^{9a}
- (2) Where the Court of first instance refuses to take the evidence offered either on the erroneous view as to its inadmissibility or for any other reason.¹⁰
- (3) Where an appellate Court finds that certain documents admitted in evidence have not been proved according to law, that the examination of the accused under S. 342 is not satisfactory and that the accused should be examined afresh.^{10a}
- (4) Where the prosecution witnesses have not been cross-examined at the trial, the witnesses not having been recalled after charge, and the accused wishes their evidence to be brought before the appellate Court.^{10b}
- (5) Where the accused complains that a confession has been obtained from him by undue influence or force and where the trial Court fails to inquire into the allegations.¹¹
- (6) Where the accused is said to be insane and the medical or expert evidence has not been taken on the point.¹²

The Court of appeal has also under S. 423, the power to remand the whole case for re-trial.^{12a} Whether a remand under that section or taking additional evidence under this section is the proper procedure will depend upon the facts of each case,¹³ but where an illegality in the conduct of the case has been committed, as for instance the non-compliance with the provisions of S. 256 or S. 342, the proper course would be

5. "Shall record its reasons." — The provision was first introduced in the 1898 Code. Whenever additional evidence is now taken under this section reasons for the same should be given.¹ This provision is a guarantee against the appellate Court exercising its powers arbitrarily.²

In an appeal against the conviction of an accused for possession of cocaine, the appellate Court sent for the Chemical Examiner's report which was not tendered in evidence in the lower Court, and without any formal order admitting this further evidence and without recording the reasons for taking such additional evidence, admitted the report and ultimately dismissed the appeal. It was held that the additional evidence ought not to have been perused in appeal unless the provisions of this section were complied with.³

It has, however, been held that the mere fact that reasons have not been recorded is not an illegality vitiating the trial and that the defect is curable under S. 537 if it has not caused a failure of justice.⁴

6. "Direct it to be taken by a Magistrate." — The Court can only direct additional evidence to be taken by a Magistrate. It cannot call for a report from such Magistrate¹ or a finding on such additional evidence² and act thereon,³ nor can it send the case to the

A Court or Magistrate who is directed to take additional evidence can take only such evidence as has been directed or asked to be taken, and not more; whereas if the case is remanded under S. 423 the accused is entitled to lead such additional evidence as he may desire.⁵

Under the later Codes, the evidence should ordinarily be taken in the presence of the accused, though the Court has power to dispense with such presence.¹ If the original trial had been with a jury or assessors, it is not necessary that the additional evidence should be taken in the presence of the jury or the assessors.²

9. Grounds held insufficient for quashing commitment. —

The following have been held not to be grounds for quashing a commitment —

- (1) Where the Magistrate finds subsequent to the order of committal that he should not have committed the accused.¹
- (2) Where a joint commitment is made of several accused when with reference to S. 233, they should have been committed separately. In such cases the Sessions Court can try the accused separately or amend the charge.²
- (3) Where the committing Magistrate acts on the evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whose file the case has been transferred to his own Court (S. 350 applies to such a case³).
- (4) Where the commitment is made merely on wrong exercise of discretion.⁴
- (5) Where the only evidence against the accused is the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The reason is that acting upon such evidence in proper cases is not illegal.⁵ Where the commitment is made to the same Sessions Judge who gave the direction for prosecution of the accused for the offence of giving false evidence before him, when there is no Assistant or Additional Sessions Judge in the District.⁶
- (6) Where the first class Magistrate who had discharged the accused under S. 209, committed him as per orders of the District Magistrate passed under S. 436. The reason is that the order of such Magistrate was not without jurisdiction.⁷

10. Appeal or revision. — Under S. 422 of the Code of 1861, where a Court of appeal took additional evidence and disposed of the appeal, the judgment was considered to be an original judgment and it was held that an appeal lay against such judgment to the High Court on the merits.¹ The section was amended in 1869, and since then a judgment passed by the appellate Court after taking the additional evidence was held to be only as appellate judgment from which there was no appeal.²

A Court of revision will not interfere with an order under this section made by a Court of appeal unless it is satisfied that the appellate Court had committed an error of law which has prejudiced the accused on the merits.³

An appeal was pending before the first class Magistrate. He ordered some additional evidence to be taken under this section. One of the parties to the appeal filed a petition before the Additional District Magistrate who withdrew the appeal to his file and disposed of it without taking the additional evidence. It was held that he had the power to do so and that he was not bound by the opinion of the first class Magistrate.⁴ It was observed that :

"Under S. 423 the appellate Court, if it thinks additional evidence necessary, may take such evidence before deciding the appeal, but there is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure or any reason to render it illegal or irregular for the appellate Court to dispense with such evidence if further consideration or argument leads the Court to the conclusion that such evidence is not necessary."

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This section provides for the procedure to be followed where the Judges of the Court of appeal are equally divided in opinion. This provision was first introduced in the Code of 1872. Before that year such cases were governed by the Letters Patent. Under the Letters Patent before its amendment in 1928 the opinion of the senior Judge prevailed and no reference to a third Judge was allowed.¹ As regards the amendment in 1928, see Letters Patent (Calcutta), clause 36.

The section applies not only to appeals but also to revision petitions by virtue of S. 439, sub-s.(1).²

The same procedure has been provided for such cases in a reference under S. 378 for confirmation of death sentence. The principle of this section applies to a reference under S. 307.³

The powers conferred by the Code under S. 195, sub-s.(6) (now repealed)⁴ or over applications for bail⁵ are not, however, part of the appellate and revisional jurisdiction conferred under Chapters XXXI and XXXII of the Code and consequently, where there is a difference of opinion this section does not apply; but clause 36 of the Letters Patent applies.

It was held that this section did not apply to revision petitions preferred to the High Court under s.107 of the Government of India Act of 1915 as such petitions were outside the powers conferred by the Code. Such cases were governed by the Letters Patent.⁶ Under s.224 of the Government of India Act of 1935 the High Court has no revisional jurisdiction over the judicial orders of subordinate Courts.

A third Judge to whom reference is made, under this section, cannot make a reference to a Full Bench.⁷

2. "Case." — Where upon a difference of opinion between two Judges the 'case' is laid before a third Judge, the whole case is referred to a third Judge and not merely the point or points upon which the Judges differ; it is the duty of the third Judge to consider all the points involved before he gives his opinion.¹ The third Judge should not, however, differ on a point on which both the referring Judges agreed unless there are strong grounds to do so. Such cases may occur where the Judges are agreed that an accused cannot be acquitted but differ whether he ought to be convicted or whether a new trial should be ordered,² or where they are agreed that the accused is guilty but disagree on a subsidiary point, e. g., a consequential order under s.517 of the Code.³

In cases, however, where there are two or more accused, and the Judges are agreed in opinion with regard to one of them, but are divided as regards the others, the case which is laid before the third Judge is only the case of the accused with regard to whom there is a difference of opinion.⁴

3. "Judgment or order shall follow such opinion." — Where a case is referred to a third Judge, he is entitled to give his own opinion, and it will be according to such opinion that judgment will follow.¹ He need not necessarily decide the case according to the opinion of the Judge who was in favour of an acquittal.² Where the Judges are agreed as to the guilt of the accused in a murder case but differ as to whether the sentence should be one of transportation for life or of death, the High Court of Calcutta has held that the fact that there is such a difference of opinion is itself a ground for holding that the death penalty should not be awarded, though the rule is not an inflexible one and cannot be considered to prevent the third Judge to whom a reference is made under this section, from considering the case for himself and to judge for himself whether death penalty should or should not be given.³

4. Appeal. — Under clause 41 of the Letters Patent no appeal lies to the Privy Council, from the judgment of a Judge of a High Court on a reference to him on difference between two other Judges of the same Court.¹

430.* Judgments and orders passed by an Appellate Court upon appeal shall be final, except in the cases provided for in section 417 and Chapter XXXII.

Finality of orders on appeal.

1. Scope of the section. — Sections 407 to 415A, provide for appeals against convictions, and S. 417 for appeals against acquittals, in trials. An appeal is, to all intents and purposes, a trial.¹ Therefore, in the absence of a specific provision to the contrary, it would be open to contend that a conviction by an appellate Court is also open to appeal under the said provisions. This section is intended to negative such a result and provides that an appellate judgment or order is final,^{1a} subject to the provisions of S. 417 and Chapter XXXII (revision). A sentence is said to be final when it cannot be set aside or interfered with in any manner by any Court.²

This section does not, in any way, affect the provisions of S. 369, which, by force of S. 424, is applicable to judgments in appeals also.

Section 430
Note 1

Reading the two sections together, as they ought to be, it follows that an appellate Court, like the trial Court, cannot alter or review its own judgment or order. Nor is such judgment or order open to any further appeal except as provided by section 417.

The question has arisen as to whether a judgment given in an appeal without hearing the appellant or his pleader is a bar to the Court reconsidering the matter subsequently either by directly reviewing its previous decision or by way of entertaining a fresh appeal or application for the same purpose. The answer to the question depends largely upon a consideration of the provisions of ss. 421 and 423. Section 421 lays down the conditions, on the fulfilment of which an appellate Court is entitled to dismiss an appeal summarily. These conditions vary with two classes of appeals, which may, for the sake of convenience of expression, be called jail appeals, that is, appeals which are presented through the officer in charge of the jail and non-jail appeals which would include all other appeals.

As regards jail appeals, S. 421 requires the Court to peruse the petition of appeal and the copy of the judgment under appeal before dismissing it. If this is done, the judgment of dismissal is final and cannot, under the provisions S. 369, be altered or reviewed by the same Court, as for example, by entertaining a fresh appeal or application in respect of the same matter,³ even though the appellant was actually not heard in the matter.⁴ The reason is that in jail appeals this section does not make it essential that the appellant should be heard before the appeal is dismissed.⁵ On the other hand, where the Court dismisses a jail appeal without perusing the petition of appeal or the copy of the judgment accompanying it, it will be acting without jurisdiction and the dismissal is not a valid judgment or order which is entitled to that finality which is conferred on judgments by S. 369; a subsequent appeal or application in respect of the same matter is open to consideration on its merits.⁶

As regards non-jail appeals, S. 421 imposes an additional duty on the appellate Court, besides that of a perusal of the petition of appeal and of the copy of the judgment appealed against; and that is, that the appellant or his pleader should have had a reasonable opportunity of being heard in support of the appeal, before it is dismissed summarily. Where these conditions are satisfied and the appeal is dismissed, the dismissal is final and cannot be reconsidered in any manner such as the entertainment of a fresh appeal or application for the same purpose,⁷ even though the appellant or his pleader was absent at the hearing and was consequently not heard.⁸ But where no such opportunity has been given, the dismissal of the appeal would be without jurisdiction and will not bar a reconsideration of the matter.⁹

Where an appeal is not summarily dismissed under S. 421, the Court is bound to give notice to the parties under S. 422, send for the records of the case from the lower Court, peruse the same, and hear the parties if they appear, before making a final order in the appeal.

If these conditions are fulfilled the judgment or order of the appellate Court is not open to reconsideration by the same Court and is final. The fact that the parties or their pleaders were not present notwithstanding the opportunity given to them, and were consequently not heard, does not affect the finality of the appellate judgment or order.¹⁰ But where the conditions of ss. 422 and 423 are not fulfilled, as where an appeal is dismissed merely for default of appearance of the parties,¹¹ or when no notice has been given to the parties as to the date and place of hearing,¹² or the parties though present are not heard, the judgment will be without jurisdiction and will not be a bar to a subsequent reconsideration of the same matter.

Where a convicted person has preferred both a jail appeal and an appeal through a pleader and both of them are pending and the Court dismisses the former summarily in ignorance of the latter appeal, still, it cannot set aside the order of dismissal,¹³ but the High Court in revision can set aside such order.^{13a}

It has been held by the High Courts of Madras and Bombay that the dismissal of an appeal under s. 421 on the ground that the appeal is barred by limitation is a valid judgment and is final.¹⁴ A contrary view has however been expressed in the undermentioned case.¹⁵ It is submitted that the latter view is incorrect.

A was charged with offences under ss. 302 and 304 of the Penal Code. At the trial, he was acquitted of the offence under s. 302 and was convicted of the offence under s. 304. A's appeal against his conviction under s. 304 was dismissed by the High Court. Then the Provincial Government appealed against A's acquittal of the offence under s. 302: It was held that the order of the High Court passed in A's

If the evidence is such that the Judge would have been bound to rule that there was no evidence on which a jury could convict, then a committal ought not to be made. the accused has been put on his trial and pleads to the charge as it is then too late to object to the commitment. This latter view is shared also by the High Courts of Madras⁴ and Lahore⁵ and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind.⁶ Where the accused is put on his trial and pleads to the charge, the Judge should proceed according to law and dispose of the case under chapter XXIII of the Code or the Public Prosecutor may, with the consent of the Court, withdraw the prosecution under S. 491.⁷

11. Effect of quashing commitment. — The primary effect of the order quashing the commitment is to supersede any action taken by the Magistrate under S. 210, and his proceedings subsequent thereto. In such a case it is necessary for the Magistrate to go back to the point at which he took cognizance of the complaint. The order does not amount to discharge of the accused and no fresh complaint is necessary.¹ The accused may be charged again with the offence.²

1. Legislative changes.

Differences between Codes of 1861 and 1872 — In S. 228 of the Code of 1861, it was provided that if the Magistrate was not satisfied that there were reasonable grounds for believing that a particular witness was material, he was not bound to summon the witness “unless such a sum shall be deposited with the Magistrate as he shall consider necessary to defray the expense of obtaining the attendance of the witness.” Hence, even if the Magistrate was not satisfied that a witness was a material witness, he was bound to summon him if the accused was prepared to pay his expenses and deposited the expenses with the Magistrate.¹ This position was altered in the Code of 1872 which left it to the discretion of the Magistrate to summon a witness and empowered him to refuse to summon a witness even though the accused might be willing and prepared to bear the expenses of the witnesses.

Changes made in 1882 — The provision as to leaving it to the Clerk of the Crown to summon the witnesses in cases of commitment to the High Court was new.

Changes made in 1898 — The words “and all other proper expenses” were added at the end of the section.

2. Scope and applicability of the section.—It is the duty of the committing Magistrate to see that all the evidence available, whether for the prosecution or for the defence, is before the Sessions Court.¹ The procedure provided in this section is to summon the witnesses named by the accused to give evidence at the trial in the Sessions Court. This applies to the witnesses named by the accused who have not been examined by the Magistrate. The next section applies to the complainant and the witnesses for the prosecution and such of the witnesses for the accused as have appeared and given evidence before the committing Magistrate. In their case, that section provides that the Magistrate should require them to execute bonds for their appearance and for giving evidence in the Sessions Court at the trial.

Under this section, the Magistrate is bound to summon the witnesses who have been named in the list given by the accused under S. 211 and who have not appeared before him,² except in the cases mentioned in the two provisos. But this duty arises only in the case of persons named by the accused in the list supplied by him to the Magistrate under S. 211.³ Hence, where on being asked to give such list the accused declines to do so, the Magistrate is not bound to summon any witnesses that he may desire to be called subsequent to the commitment.⁴

Under S. 291, the Sessions Judge is bound to enforce the attendance of the witnesses summoned under this section, who fail to appear at the trial.⁵

3. Refusal to summon unnecessary witness.—The Magistrate has no power to refuse to summon a witness on the ground that his evidence will not be material,¹ unless he considers that the witness is included in the list merely for purposes of vexation or delay or of defeating the ends of justice. But where the Magistrate considers that the witness is included in the list for any such purpose, he can require the accused to show how the evidence of the witness will be material. Where he is not satisfied that the evidence of the witness will be material, he may refuse to summon him recording his reasons for doing so.² As to the liability of the accused to pay process fees and other fees for summoning witnesses, see Notes to S. 544.

1. Scope of the section.—This section empowers the committing Magistrate to compel the complainant, the witnesses for the prosecution and the witnesses for the defence, who have appeared in his Court to give evidence,¹ to execute bond for their appearance in the Sessions Court at the trial and for giving evidence there. If any of these persons refuses to execute the bond, the Magistrate has the power to detain him in custody till he executes the bond or till he can be sent to the Sessions Court for giving evidence there. But, where a witness has not refused to attend or to execute the bond required of him, the Magistrate has no power to demand bail from him instead of a recognizance merely because he has been declared hostile.² Though the section does not expressly empower the Magistrate to summon a witness, it has been held in the undermentioned case³ that the Magistrate has the power under this section to summon a witness to give evidence before the Sessions Court. The prosecution is not bound to examine in the Sessions Court all the witnesses for whose attendance a bond is taken under this section; it is open to the prosecution to decline to examine any witness whom it has reason to believe to be false or unnecessary.⁴ But all the witnesses executing bonds under this section must be in attendance at the trial in the Sessions Court till they are discharged by the Court.⁵ Under this section the Magistrate is not bound to take bonds from all the witnesses who have been examined in his Court. Only such of the witnesses as are 'necessary,' have to execute the bonds under this section.⁶

219.* (1) The committing Magistrate or, in the absence of such Magistrate, any other Magistrate empowered by or under section 206 may, if he thinks fit, summon and examine supplementary witnesses after the commitment and before the commencement of the trial, and bind them over in manner hereinbefore provided to appear and give evidence.

Power to summon supplementary witnesses.

(2) Such examination shall, if possible, be taken in the presence of the accused, and, where the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate, a copy of the evidence of such witnesses shall be given to the accused free of cost.

Synopsis

2. Scope of the section.
3. Free copy of evidence to be given to accused.
4. Examination, if to be in presence of accused.

1. Legislative changes.

Changes introduced by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) For the word "Magistrate" in sub-s.(1) the words "The committing Magistrate . . . S. 206" were substituted.
- (2) For the words "shall, if the accused so require, be given to him free of cost" in sub-s.(2) the words "shall be given to the accused free of cost" were substituted.

2. Scope of the section.—This section empowers the Magistrate even after a case has been committed, to call and examine supplementary witnesses and forward their evidence to the Sessions Court.¹ But the power cannot be exercised by any and every Magistrate; it is confined to the committing Magistrate or any other Magistrate empowered to commit cases to the Sessions. Moreover, the power exists only till the commencement of the trial in the Sessions Court. Where the trial has actually commenced, the Magistrate has no power to add to the record by examining additional witnesses under this section even under the orders of the Sessions Court.² But before the commencement of the trial, this power can be exercised at any time. The Magistrate can exercise the power on his own accord or on being directed to do so by the Sessions Judge who, on examining the record finds gaps in the evidence which he deems necessary to be filled up.³ Even in cases in which the accused has confessed his guilt, the Magistrate is justified in examining supplementary witnesses so as to have on the record all the material evidence.⁴ The additional evidence can be taken either at the request of the prosecution or of the defence; but the Magistrate should be fair to both the sides and if he examines additional witnesses on one side he should allow the other side to let in rebutting evidence if it desires to do so.⁵ Under this section the Magistrate can only supplement the evidence already taken. He has no power to add to or alter the charge after the order of commitment. Similarly, the power to amend or add to the charge under S. 226, applies only to cases where the charge is imperfect as at the date of commitment. That section cannot justify the charge being amended or added to on the basis of supplementary evidence taken under this section.⁶

3. Free copy of evidence to be given to accused. — The section provides that when the Magistrate is not a Presidency Magistrate a copy of the evidence of witnesses examined under this section should be given to the accused free of cost. Such copies are also exempt from court-fees under S. 35, Court-fees Act, 1870.¹

4. Examination, if to be in presence of accused. — The words "if possible" in sub-s.(2) indicate that the examination of the supplementary witnesses after commitment may be taken when the accused is not present.¹

Specific name of offence sufficient description.

(3) If the law which creates the offence does not give it any specific name, so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.

How stated where offence has no specific name.

(4) The law and section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed shall be mentioned in the charge.

(5) The fact that the charge is made is equivalent to a statement that every legal condition required by law to constitute the offence charged was fulfilled in the particular case.

What implied in charge.

(6) In the presidency-towns the charge shall be written in English; elsewhere it shall be written either in English or in the language of the Court.

(7) If the accused having been previously convicted of any offence, is liable, by reason of such previous conviction, to enhanced punishment, or to punishment of a different kind, for a subsequent offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court may think fit to award for the subsequent offence,

Previous conviction when to be set out.

* Code of 1898, original S. 221.

Sub-sections (1) to (6) and the illustrations were the same. Sub-s. (7) ran as follows:

If the accused has been previously convicted of any offence, and it is intended to prove such previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment which the Court is competent to award, the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement is omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Previous conviction when to be set out.

Section 221 the fact, date and place of the previous conviction shall be stated in the charge. If such statement has been omitted, the Court may add it at any time before sentence is passed.

Illustrations

(a) A is charged with the murder of B. This is equivalent to a statement that A's act fell within the definition of murder given in Ss. 299 and 300 of the Indian Penal Code; that it did not fall within any of the general exceptions of the same Code; and that it did not fall within any of the five exceptions to S. 300, or that, if it did fall within Exception I, one or other of the three provisos to that exception applied to it.

(b) A is charged, under S. 326 of the Indian Penal Code, with voluntarily causing grievous hurt to B by means of an instrument for shooting. This is equivalent to a statement that the case was not provided for by S. 335 of the Indian Penal Code, and that the general exceptions did not apply to it.

(c) A is accused of murder, cheating, theft, extortion, adultery or criminal intimidation, or using a false property-mark. The charge may state that A committed murder, or cheating, or theft, or extortion, or adultery, or criminal intimidation, or that he used a false property-mark, without reference to the definitions of those crimes contained in the Indian Penal Code; but the sections under which the offence is punishable must, in each instance, be referred to in the charge.

(d) A is charged, under S. 184 of the Indian Penal Code with intentionally obstructing a sale of property offered for sale by the lawful authority of a public servant. The charge should be in those words.

The words "having been previously . . . and it is intended . . . subsequent offence," in sub-s.(7) were substituted for the words "has been previously . . . competent to award" and the words "is omitted" in the same sub-section were substituted by the words "has been omitted," by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

1. Charge—General.—It is a fundamental principle of criminal law that the accused should be informed with certainty and accuracy the exact nature of the charge brought against him.¹ Otherwise, he may be seriously prejudiced in his defence.^{1a} It is therefore imperative that before a person is convicted of any offence he should (subject to certain exceptions) be formally charged with having committed the offence specified and be given an opportunity to defend himself against such charge.² He can be convicted only on proof of the particular offences so specified and not for offences not so specified.³

A 'charge' in this country corresponds to an 'indictment' in English law and is very much more than a mere form.⁴ It should be carefully drawn up in accordance with the offence disclosed.⁵

Notes 1-2

This section and the next two sections specify the particulars that should be stated in the charge, the object of such statement being to enable the accused person to know the substantive charge he will have to meet and to be ready for it before the evidence is given.⁶ Reading them together, every charge should contain the following particulars:

1. A statement of the offence with which the accused is charged (S. 221 sub-sections 1 to 3.)
2. A statement of the law and the section of the law against which the offence is said to have been committed (sub-section (4)).
3. Particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence and the person against whom or the thing in respect of which it was committed (S. 222).
4. Particulars of the manner in which the alleged offence was committed. This is, however, necessary only where the particulars mentioned in S. 221 and S. 222 do not give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged (S. 223).

The extent of the particulars necessary to be given will depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case.⁷ In drawing up a charge all verbiage should be avoided⁸ as also matters which are not necessary for the prosecution to prove.⁹ Abbreviation, as by using the words 'et cetera,' should also be avoided.¹⁰ A charge should be precise in its scope and particular in its details.¹¹

The charge should be stated to the accused by the Magistrate himself and not be left to be stated by others.¹²

2. "Shall state the offence"—Sub-section (1).—Every charge must state the offence with which the accused is charged. Where the offence has a name given to it by law, it is sufficient to describe it by its name only (sub-s. (2)). Where it has no name given to it by law, so much of the definition of the offence must be stated as to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged (sub-s. (3)).

Where a person is charged with several offences all having reference to the same subject-matter or series of transactions, a single charge may be framed with several counts or heads of charge for the several offences.¹

3. Description of offence by name—Sub-section (2).—Where an offence has a name given to it by law such as "rioting", "theft", etc., the Court may describe it by its name only. Thus, in a charge under S. 147, Penal Code, where the word "rioting" is included in the charge, the words "by force or by show of force" need not be included because the suggestion of force is contained in the word "rioting."¹ Similarly, it is open to the prosecution to charge abetment generally and then, if the evidence did not establish abetment other than in one particular form, to rely on this particular form for a conviction. The charge will amount to notice to the accused that he will have to meet a case of abetment in one or more of the different ways indicated in S. 107, Penal Code.² The Court has, however, a discretion to give further details according to the facts and circumstances of each case. Where further details are given, they should be fully and accurately stated and should be such as to give the accused clear notice of the accusation against him.³

4. Definition of the offence — Sub-section (3).—In giving the definition of the offence charged, it is always a sound rule for the Court to adhere to the language of the statute as far as possible.¹ Thus, for an offence under S. 211 of the Penal Code the charge should set forth that the prisoner "falsely charged" and not that he "made an accusation."² A repetition of the words in the marginal note to the section is not enough.³

5. Section of law to be stated—Sub-section (4).—Where the section of the Penal Code with which a person is intended to be charged contains several parts, that part of the section which is applicable to the case should be stated.¹

6. Previous convictions — Sub-section (7). — If a person is intended to be tried and punished with enhanced punishment or with punishment of a different kind as being a previous offender, the particulars of the previous conviction should be stated in the charge,¹ though the extent of the former punishment need not be stated.² In the absence of such statement, the accused cannot be awarded enhanced punishment.³ A statement of the previous conviction in the charge is, however, not necessary where such conviction is to be taken into consideration, not for the purpose of awarding the enhanced punishment under s. 75, Penal Code, but merely for the purpose of exercising the discretion of the Court as to the extent of the punishment to be awarded within the maximum fixed for the offence charged.⁴

A "previous conviction" within the meaning of this section means a previous conviction by a British Indian Court and not by a foreign Court.⁵ Further, it means a conviction obtained before the moment of time when the charge is framed.⁶ It may also be noted that for purposes of s. 75 of the Penal Code, a person cannot be charged with a conviction for an offence committed subsequent to the date of the offence for which he is on trial.⁷ Similarly, s. 75 of the Penal Code does not apply to a case where the subsequent offence is committed before the conviction for the former offence.^{7a}

Notes 6-7 :

The word "punishment" in this section does not include an order under s. 565 for not notifying the address of the offender and consequently it is not necessary, for the purpose of making this order, that the previous conviction should be mentioned in the charge.⁸

Where the previous conviction has been omitted from the charge, it may be added at any time before sentence is passed. A sentence passed already cannot be enhanced by the subsequent discovery of the fact that the prisoner has been previously convicted.⁹ The High Court may, however, in revision, add the charge in proper cases and direct evidence to be taken on such charge.¹⁰

7. Charge for offences one of which is triable as a warrant case and the other as a summons case. — Where it is intended to proceed to try a person for two offences one of which is triable as a warrant case (in which a charge is to be framed) and the other as a summons case (in which no charge need be framed), the charge in respect of the former offence should also state the latter offence.¹

8. Liability to whipping if to be stated in the charge. — It has been held in the undermentioned case¹ that when a person is tried for an offence which is liable to be punished with whipping, the liability to whipping must be stated in the charge.

9. Aggravating circumstances. — Where a person is charged of an offence which provides a certain punishment under certain circumstances and a higher punishment under aggravating circumstances, the existence of such aggravating circumstances should be set forth in the charge.¹

10. Special exceptions. — Under ss. 235 to 237 of the Code of 1861, the charge had to deny the existence of special exceptions where the section defining the offence charged had exceptions.¹ This is now no longer necessary as those sections have not been repeated in the present Code.

11. Constructive offences. — Under S. 149 of the Penal Code, if an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, every person who at the time of committing that offence is a member of the same assembly is guilty of that offence. Where a person is charged with an offence constructively by force of S. 149, the charge should specify such fact. Thus, where the accused was only charged with an offence under S. 126 of the Railways Act, a conviction for an offence under that section read with S. 149 on the basis of constructive liability cannot be sustained where it has prejudiced the accused.¹ Where A is charged constructively for an offence, it clearly intimates to him that he did not himself commit the substantive offence but that he is guilty inasmuch as somebody else in prosecution of the common object of the riot did commit such substantive offence. If the person charged with committing the substantive offence is acquitted of such offence, the offence by implication also disappears, and A cannot be convicted of the substantive offence.²

2. ('12) 13 Cri L Jour 502 (503) : 15 Ind Cas 646 (Cal), Razuddi v. Emperor. (S. 325 read with S. 149, Penal Code.)

A charge under S. 149 is not for any specific named offence and the fact that an offence is committed in pursuance of the common object is of the essence of the case. It is therefore necessary to mention the same in the charge unless it has already been set out in the main charge.³

Section 221
Notes 11-15

12. Unnecessary averments in the charge — Surplusage. — As has been seen in Note 1, a charge should never contain more than what is necessary for the prosecution to prove.¹ Allegations in the charge which are not necessary to be proved to constitute an offence and which might be entirely omitted without affecting the charge against the prisoner and without detriment to the indictment are, however, considered as mere surplusage and may be disregarded in evidence.²

13. Defective charge — Effect of. — See Section 225.

14. Form of charge in various offences. — See Section 223.

15. Cases where no charge need be framed. — No charge is necessary to be framed in the following cases :

- (1) inquiries under S. 117;
- (2) trials of summons cases (see S. 242); and
- (3) summary cases where no appeal lies (S. 263).

There is a difference of opinion as to whether there should be a definite charge in prosecutions under the Insolvency Acts. According to the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur it is not essential that there should be a definite charge, a finding and a conviction as a foundation for a sentence under the said provisions. All that the law requires is that the principles underlying a criminal trial should be observed. So, where an insolvent proceeded against under that Act was informed of the nature of the proceedings and the offence with which he was charged, it was held that the essentials of criminal trial were sufficiently complied with.¹ The High Court of Calcutta² and the Chief Court of the Punjab³ have, however, taken a contrary view.

1. Legislative changes.Differences between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 :

There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. The section was first enacted in the Code of 1872 as S. 440.

* Code of 1882 : S. 222 : Same as sub-s. (1). Sub-section (2) was added in 1893.
Code of 1872 : S. 440 ; Code of 1861 — Nil.

Changes introduced in 1882 :

The thing in respect of which the offence was committed was made one of the matters in respect of which particulars were to be given in the charge.

Changes made in 1898 :

Sub-section (2) was added. See Note 6.

2. Scope of the section.—In addition to the particulars specified in S. 221 it is necessary, as provided by this section, that the charge should contain particulars as to the time and place of the alleged offence and the person (if any) against whom and the thing (if any) in respect of which the offence is alleged to have been committed.¹ Such particulars of the above points must be given as are reasonably sufficient to give the accused notice of the matter with which he is charged.² But the charge is not necessarily invalidated by the giving of more particulars than are absolutely necessary.³

As to the effect of an omission to state or of an error in the statement of the particulars required by this section, see Ss. 225 and 232. As to when the manner of the commission of the offence should be given in the charge, see S. 223 and Notes thereunder.

3. Time of offence.—The time of the alleged offence should be given in the charge with as much particularity as is necessary to give the accused sufficient notice of the matter of which he is charged.¹

Notes 5-6

6. Sub-section (2) — Charge of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation. — Prior to the enactment of sub-s. (2) in the Code of 1898 there was a conflict of decisions¹ as to whether, in a case of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, it was necessary to frame a distinct charge in respect of each item of money misappropriated or whether it was sufficient to frame a charge in respect of the aggregate sum misappropriated though it might be composed of different items misappropriated on different occasions. This conflict is set at rest by the enactment of this sub-section. Where a person commits criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation in respect of various sums at different times in the course of a single year, he may now be charged in respect of the total of all the sums as for a single offence without specifying the items of which it is composed or the dates on which they were misappropriated.²

Section 222

The amendment has removed two difficulties which used to be felt under the old Code.³ Firstly, there was great difficulty in convicting an accused person where there was a running account between the parties and the prosecution was unable to specify the particular item in respect of which the offence was committed. This difficulty has been removed by the provision that it is not necessary to specify the items in respect of which the offence was committed and that it is enough to mention the gross sum in respect of which the offence was committed. The second difficulty was that under S. 234 more than three offences of the same kind could not be tried at the same trial. Hence, in the absence of any provision enabling the clubbing together of different items it was found impossible to try at one trial more than three acts of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation though committed in the course of the same year and by the same accused. The provision that a charge may be laid for the gross sum of which the different items (misappropriated in a single year) are composed and that such a charge constitutes only a charge for a single offence for the purpose of S. 234, has now removed this difficulty. Reading this section and S. 234, three separate charges of criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation in respect of three gross sums each made up of separate items, can be legally tried together provided the offences in respect of all the three gross sums are alleged to have been committed within a space of twelve months.^{3a}

Though the sub-section dispenses with the specification of particular items or the dates on which they were misappropriated, it requires the gross sum alleged to have been misappropriated and the dates between which the offence is alleged to have been committed to be specified in the charge; a charge which does not specify even these particulars will be bad.⁴ Similarly, the sub-section does not in any way affect the principle that the accused must have a definite charge to answer; a charge which contains the gross sum and the dates as mentioned in this sub-section may yet be bad as being too vague.⁵ Nor does the section dispense with the necessity of a finding as to a definite sum having been misappropriated before the accused can be convicted.⁶

The sub-section does not prohibit the specification of particular items misappropriated where a gross sum is given as the subject-matter of the offence.⁷ So also, where a charge is laid under this section for a gross sum embezzled, the Court is not precluded from examining the evidence in respect of each item which went to make up the total amount entered in the charge-sheet.^{7a} Nor does the fact that particular items are specified in the charge detract from its character as a charge for a single offence and convert it into a charge for as many offences as there are items particularised.⁸

The sub-section only provides that if and when a charge is laid for a gross sum instead of for particular items, the charge is to be treated as a charge for a single offence irrespective of the number of items of which the gross sum is composed. It does not prohibit the framing of different charges in respect of different items,⁹ nor permit such charges when framed to be treated as a charge for a single offence.¹⁰ It applies not only to cases where there is a general deficiency and the prosecution is not able to specify particular items but also to cases where the particular items might have been, but are not specified.¹¹

The sub-section only applies to cases of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation in respect of money. Where the offence between which accused dishonestly converted to his own use the property in question and referring only to the date on which the conversion was discovered, is bad for vagueness.)

has been committed in respect of any other property, the sub-section does not apply.¹²

The sub-section applies only to offences of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation.¹³ Thus, where the accused is alleged to have obtained on different occasions several sums from the complainant by false pretences, a single charge of cheating in respect of all the items is not tenable.¹⁴ So also, this sub-section does not apply to cases where the accused is charged with criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation and some other offence, such as falsification of accounts, cheating, etc. The provision enabling different items to be lumped together and be charged as a single offence in the case of a criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation cannot be made use of to justify a joint trial of such offence with an offence of a different character.¹⁵

The sub-section requires that the period during which the offence is alleged to have been committed should not exceed one year. Thus, where the dates of misappropriation of the various items extend over a period of more than one year, they cannot all be lumped together in the same charge.¹⁶

The provision enabling it to be stated that the offence was committed between certain dates (instead of on a certain date) applies not only to cases where different items are alleged to have been misappropriated on different occasions and a charge is framed in respect of the gross sum made up of the different items, but also to cases where a specific sum is alleged to have been the subject of the offence.¹⁷

Where a single charge is framed under this section in respect of the embezzlement of different sums, it is only a single sentence that can be passed on the accused; a separate sentence cannot be passed in respect of each of the items included in the charge.¹⁸

Under S. 181, sub-s.(2), a charge of criminal misappropriation or criminal breach of trust can be tried or inquired into either at the place where the offence was committed or at the place where any part of the property was received or retained by the accused. As this sub-section (of S. 222) enables any number of acts of misappropriation committed in the course of the same year to be combined in the same charge, jurisdiction to try the charge arises at any place where the offence was committed in respect of any of the items included in the charge or at any place where the money involved in the misappropriation of any of the items was received or retained by the accused.¹⁹

7. Applicability of sub-section (2) to cases where there are two or more accused persons. — There is a conflict of decisions as to the applicability of sub-s.(2) to cases where two or more persons are accused of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation so as to enable a single charge being framed in respect of the total sum misappropriated in a given period where such sum is made up of several items misappropriated on different occasions. On the one hand, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court that the sub-section contemplates only cases in which there is only one accused person and that where there are two or more accused persons in a case, separate charges must be framed in respect of the several items as for different offences.¹ The Madras High Court has, on the other hand, held that there is no reason to restrict the scope of the sub-section in this way and even in cases where there are two or more accused persons in a case, it is open to the Court to lump together the different items misappropriated on different occasions and frame a single charge in respect of the total sum composed of the different items.² The Bombay High Court has also accepted the same view.³ But where the charge alleges that some of the accused took part in the misappropriation only in respect of some of the items of which the total sum is composed, the sub-section has no application and a single charge cannot be framed so as to cover the acts of all the accused.⁴

8. Charge under sub-section (2)—Whether trial for another item misappropriated during same period is barred.—Where an accused is charged under sub-s.(2) with criminal breach of trust in respect of a gross sum alleged to have been misappropriated by him between two given dates and is convicted or acquitted of such charge, he can be tried again in respect of another sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated by him during the same period but not included in the sum which was the subject-matter of the previous trial.¹ Such a trial is not barred under S. 403. The reason is that in such a case the subsequent trial is not for the same offence as formed the subject of previous trial. A fortiori, where the previous trial was not for a gross sum misappropriated between two dates but was for misappropriation of specific sums of money received on specific dates, a fresh trial for another offence in respect of a different sum of money said to have been misappropriated about the same time is not barred.²

9. Charge of criminal conspiracy. — In a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit an offence, the same certainty is not required in stating the object of the conspiracy as in a charge for the offence conspired to be committed. Thus, a charge of criminal conspiracy to commit a criminal breach of trust or criminal misappropriation is not bad for want of particulars as to dates, etc. of the alleged misappropriation.¹ Nor is such a charge bad because the period of the conspiracy is said to exceed one year.²

1. Scope of the section. — The description of offences in the Penal Code must of necessity be expressed in abstract terms, but the very object of the trial is to determine whether particular acts or omissions on the part of an accused fall or do not fall within the rule thus abstractedly stated.¹ Conformably to this principle, this section lays down that, in cases in which the particulars in ss. 221 and 222 are not sufficient to give the accused notice of the matters charged against him, the manner in which the offence was committed should also be stated in the charge.² The models of charges set forth in schedule v also contain or imply the setting forth with reasonable particularity of the matters alleged to constitute the offence. Thus, where an accused was charged that he "being a public servant knowingly disobeyed the direction of the law as to the way in which he had to conduct himself, etc.," it was held that the charge should set forth what the direction was, and what the conduct was, which contravened it.³

As has been seen in Notes to S. 221, the object of these sections is firstly to ensure that the accused has sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged as otherwise he will be seriously prejudiced in his defence⁴ and secondly to enable the Court to keep in view the

The section does not require that the manner in which the alleged offence was committed must be described in the charge in every case. When the nature of the case is such that the mere mention of the particulars specified in ss. 221 and 222 affords sufficient notice to the accused of the matter with which he is charged, this section does not apply and particulars as to the manner of commission of the alleged offence need not be given in the charge.⁶ No general rule, however, can be laid down as to in what cases such particulars will be necessary, the matter depending on the circumstances of each case.⁷

As to the extent to which particulars of the manner of commission of an offence should be given in a charge, no hard and fast rule can be laid down. Each case must depend on its own circumstances, regard being had to the question whether the particulars given are such as to give the accused sufficient notice of the matter he has to meet.⁸ Besides, the charge must allege all facts which are essential factors of the offence in question: see S. 221.⁹ But a charge should not be prolix subject of the false statement is material to the result of the inquiry.⁶ Where there are several false statements in the same deposition, there should only be a single charge for all such statements.⁷

As to the mode of framing a charge where the accused has made two contradictory statements but it is doubtful which of them is false, see S. 236 and Notes thereunder.

4. Rioting. — “Rioting” is an offence with a specific name and, under sub-s.(2) of S. 221, may be described by its name only.¹ When a person is charged with “rioting” it means that the prosecution alleges that all the necessary ingredients constituting the offence of rioting are present; it is not necessary to set out what those ingredients are.² There is, however, a conflict of opinions as to whether the common object of the unlawful assembly is necessary to be mentioned in the charge. On the one hand it has been held that the common object does not come within the particulars mentioned in Ss. 221 and 222, nor within S. 223 as a manner in which the offence is committed and that therefore it is not necessary to be stated in the charge though it would be desirable to do so.³ In *Kudrutullah v. Emperor*⁴ it was held that the offence of rioting “can be legally described by its specific name and the question whether any further particulars are necessary under section 223, Criminal Procedure Code, must be a question of discretion according to the circumstances of each case.” This seems to suggest that the common object may be considered as the manner in which the offence was committed. It is apparently in this view that it has been held in a number of cases that the common object must be stated in a charge of rioting.⁵

5. House-breaking, criminal trespass, etc. — A charge of house-breaking or lurking house-trespass under S. 457, Penal Code, or an offence under S. 451 of the Penal Code is not an offence with a specific name and therefore so much of the definition of the offence as is necessary to give notice to the accused of the matter charged must be set out under S. 221. Thus, it must specify the intention with which the accused is alleged to have committed the trespass.¹ Where the charge does not specify any intention of the kind mentioned in the section, the accused cannot be convicted under it,² unless it is quite certain that he has not in any way been misled or prejudiced in his defence by the defect in the charge: see S. 225. Similarly, it is not open to a Court to convict an accused under S. 457, Penal Code, when the intention found to have been entertained by him is different from that specified in the charge,³ unless the accused has not been misled by the defect in the charge.⁴ But where the intention specified in the charge under S. 457 is not established, it is open to the Court to convict him under S. 456⁵: see S. 238 Note 1.

See also the undermentioned cases.⁶

For a conviction under S. 447 which is an offence with a specific name, it is not necessary to specify the ulterior offence the accused intended to commit.⁷

hatred), it has been held that it is not necessary to set out the offending passages of the speech or writing in question where the case for the prosecution is that the speech or writing in question taken as a whole comes within the mischief of the law.¹ The requirements of the law are satisfied if the charge gives such a description of the words used as is reasonably sufficient to enable the accused to know the matter with which he is charged.²

7. Cheating. — As the illustration to S. 223 shows, in a case of cheating the charge must set out the manner in which the offence was committed so as to give the accused sufficient notice of the matter with which he is charged.¹ Whether the manner set out is reasonably sufficient to give the accused such notice depends upon the facts and circumstances of each case. Where the manner was described in the charge as follows: "by deceiving with false representations and promises as well as by conduct," it was held that the expression used was too vague and indefinite.^{1a} Where the charge is for an offence under the first portion of S. 415, Penal Code, it is not necessary to state that any loss was caused by the inducement² though it should be stated that the property induced to be delivered was that of the prosecutor.³ But where the charge is under the second portion of S. 415, it is necessary to state in what way the complainant would be a loser as a result of the inducement.⁴ The reason is that the term 'manner' in this section includes, with reference to an offence of cheating, every ingredient by virtue of which the act ceases to be one of mere non-criminal deception and becomes one of cheating within the meaning of S. 415, Penal Code, and the effect of the deception upon the victim's body, mind, reputation or property would thus be a part of the manner of cheating.⁵ A charge of an attempt to cheat should state the persons upon whom the attempt was made and the manner in which he was induced.⁶

8. Defamation. — A charge of defamation should set out the words alleged to be defamatory.¹ But where the charge is clear and unambiguous and such that the accused cannot be misled in any way, the mere fact that the exact defamatory words are not reproduced does not vitiate the charge.² Where defamatory words are alleged to have been uttered by the accused on several occasions, the charge must give particulars of the various occasions.³

9. Falsification of accounts. — A charge of falsification of accounts under S. 477A, Penal Code, must specify the entries alleged to be falsified.¹

10. Hurt, grievous hurt, etc. — A charge under S. 324, Penal Code, should follow the wording of the definition of the offence¹ inasmuch as it is not an offence with a specific name, but it need not deny that the hurt was caused on grave and sudden provocation.² Where two persons commit an affray and also cause hurt to each other, the charge must be for the more serious offence of hurt.³ Where the accused is alleged to have caused several hurts, a general charge covering all the hurts without particularising the details will be bad.⁴

11. Forgery, etc. — A charge of forgery should contain a description of the document forged. It is not sufficient to say merely that the accused committed forgery by signing the name of a certain person (specified) on a document.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.²

12. Culpable homicide and murder. — Illustration (c) to this section shows that the charge for murder need not set out the manner in which A murdered B. But as has been seen in the Notes to S. 221, where the charge does give details it must be fully and correctly given. Thus, it should follow the definition and language of S. 300 of the Code.¹ Where the murder is alleged to have been effected by blows, it should set out that the blows were inflicted with the intention of causing death or that they were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and that they were intentionally inflicted.^{1a} It should mention the fact of death having been caused² and in cases of wilful murder the words "culpable homicide amounting to murder" must be used.³ Section 34 of the Penal Code cannot be used in a charge under the second part of S. 304 of that Code.⁴ See also the under-mentioned cases.⁵

persons are being charged with kidnapping or with abduction, and similarly whether the intent alleged was an intent to compel the victim to marry against her will or whether the kidnapping or abduction was with the knowledge that it was likely that the victim would be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse.¹ It is always wise where a charge is made, in respect of the same occurrence, both of kidnapping and abducting, that two heads should be made. But it is not illegal to make the two charges under one head. The point to be seen in each case is whether the accused person was prejudiced thereby.² See also the case cited below.³

15. Extortion. — Where the offence charged involves consequences which may be stated in a general form such as may arise in a case of arson, where a man may by one act of arson set fire and destroy several stacks of several persons, no particulars are required, the nature of the offence being sufficiently stated by the date, time and place of setting of fire; but a charge for extortion or for obtaining money from persons by unlawful means should state with accuracy the approximate amounts alleged to have been obtained from each person and the nature of the extortion used against each person.¹ See also the undermentioned cases.²

16. Unlawful assembly. — In a charge for the offence of being a member of an unlawful assembly, what is necessary is that the accused shall have reasonably distinct notice of the common object¹ imputed to the assembly and of the manner in which that common object is to be brought within the language of S. 141. The charge of unlawful assembly with the common object of "harassing Hindus" is not too general or unfair or unjust to the accused.²

(a) A is charged under section 242 of the Indian Penal Code, with "having been in possession of counterfeit coin, having known at the time when he became possessed thereof that such coin was counterfeit," the word "fraudulently" being omitted in the charge. Unless it appears that A was in fact misled by this omission, the error shall not be regarded as material.

(b) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge, or is set out incorrectly. A defends himself, calls witnesses, and gives his own account of the transaction. The Court may infer from this that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating is not material.

(c) A is charged with cheating B, and the manner in which he cheated B is not set out in the charge. There were many transactions between A and B and A had no means of knowing to which of them the charge referred, and offered no defence. The Court may infer from such facts that the omission to set out the manner of the cheating was, in the case, a material error.

(d) A is charged with the murder of Khoda Baksh on the 21st January 1882. In fact, the murdered person's name was Haidar Baksh, and the date of the murder was the 20th January 1882. A was never charged with any murder but one, and had heard the inquiry before the Magistrate, which referred exclusively to the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from these facts that A was not misled and that the error in the charge was immaterial.

(c) A was charged with murdering Haidar Baksh on the 20th January 1882, and Khoda Baksh (who tried to arrest him for that murder) on the 21st January 1882. When charged for the murder of Haidar Baksh, he was tried for the murder of Khoda Baksh. The witnesses present in his defence were witnesses in the case of Haidar Baksh. The Court may infer from this that A was misled, and that the error was material.

1. Scope of the section. — This section and S. 537 deal with cases where a charge is framed but there are errors, omissions or irregularities in the charge. This section provides that no error or omission in the statement of the offence or the particulars required to be stated in the charge is to be regarded as material at any stage unless the accused has been misled thereby and it has, in fact, occasioned a failure of justice;¹ while S. 537 provides that no finding, sentence or order in the case shall be reversed or altered under chapter 27 or on appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in a charge unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. Section 535 deals with cases where no charge has been framed at all, and provides that no finding or sentence in the case should be deemed invalid in appeal or revision unless the Court considers that a failure of justice has been occasioned thereby.

In Babulal Chaukhani v. King-Emperor^{1a} their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the irregularity of charging together different offences instead of charging them separately was curable under this section and S. 537 if the accused was not prejudiced. This seems to suggest that joining together in the same charge several offences which must be separately charged is an 'error' in stating the offence.

It is for the Court to decide in each case whether the defect in the charge has misled the accused.² In considering the question whether the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by the defect in the charge, regard must be had to the fact that the objection to the frame of the charge was not raised till a late stage in the proceedings.³ See also S. 537, Explanation.

The section is aimed, among other things, at objections on the ground of variance between the charge and the evidence.⁴ But the fundamental principle in all criminal charges is that the accused should not be prejudiced in his defence and, therefore, where a charge expressed in vague terms has been understood in a certain sense and proceedings have gone on, on such basis, it is not thereafter open to the prosecution to contend that the charge means something else.⁵ The object of the section is that technical defects in the charge should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice. Hence, where the guilt of the accused has been proved, he can be convicted notwithstanding that the charge contains unnecessary allegations which the prosecution has not proved.⁶

This section lays down what errors and omissions in the charge should be regarded as material. Section 232 provides for the procedure to be followed in cases where an appellate or revisional Court considers that the defect in the charge is a material one. See also Notes under sections 535 and 537.

2. Charge in cases of rioting, unlawful assembly, etc. —

Under S. 223, a charge of an offence of rioting (or connected offences) should specify the common object of the unlawful assembly. An error or omission in this respect will vitiate the trial if the accused has been prejudiced in his defence by reason of such defect in the charge.¹ But, if the accused has not been prejudiced by reason of such error or omission, the defect is not a material one.² Even in cases, where the charge is to the effect that the accused is liable constructively under S. 149 of the Penal Code for the acts of his companions, the trial is not necessarily vitiated because the charge does not specify or states

1. Legislative changes.Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 :

There was no corresponding section in the Code of 1861. This section was first enacted in the Code of 1872 as S. 446. But even under the Code of 1861 it was held that the Sessions Court had power under S. 244 (now S. 227) to amend the charge framed by the committing Magistrate.¹

* Code of 1882 : S. 226 — Same as above ; but illustrations were added in 1898.

Code of 1872 : S. 446.

446. If a prisoner is committed to the Court of Session, either without any charge at all or upon a charge which the Court, upon reference to the proceedings before the committing Magistrate, considers improper the Court of Session may draw up a charge for any offence which it considers to be proved by the evidence taken before the committing Magistrate. A copy of such charge shall be given to the accused person.

Code of 1861 — Nil.

Changes made in 1882 :

- (1) The words "at all" which occurred after the words "without any charge" in S. 446 of the Code of 1872 were omitted.
- (2) The words "or with an imperfect or erroneous charge" were substituted for the words "or upon a charge which the Court, upon reference to the proceedings before the committing Magistrate considers improper" which occurred in the Code of 1872.
- (3) The words "may draw up a charge" which occurred in the Code of 1872, were substituted by the words "may frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge."²
- (4) The words requiring a copy of the new charge to be given to the accused were omitted.

Notes 1-2

Changes made in 1898 :

The illustrations to the section were added.

2. Scope of the section. — Section 193, sub-s.(1) provides that except as otherwise expressly provided by the Code or by any other law for the time being in force, no Court of Session can take cognizance of a case as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the accused has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf. Similarly, under S. 194 the High Court is empowered to take cognizance of offences as a Court of original jurisdiction "upon a commitment made to it in manner hereinafter provided." The present section is by way of an exception to these sections.¹ It enables the High Court or the Sessions Court to amend or add to the charge on which an accused has been committed to it for trial. It also enables the High Court or the Sessions Court to frame a suitable charge in cases in which an accused has been committed without a charge. But the power is strictly limited to the cases specified in the section, viz., cases in which a person is committed for trial without a charge or with an imperfect or erroneous charge.²

It is competent to the Sessions Judge to amend the charge even after the commencement of the trial (see S. 227). But it is his duty before the commencement of the trial to scrutinize the charges and to amend them if necessary under this section.³ When the Sessions Judge finds the charges framed by the committing Magistrate imperfect in any way, it is his duty to amend them under this section and not acquit the accused.⁴

The Sessions Judge has power under the section to "frame a charge or add to or otherwise alter the charge as the case may be." He can totally reject a charge framed by the Magistrate and substitute a new charge in its place.⁵ (See illustration 1.) He can also add a charge to that framed by the committing Magistrate.⁶ (See illustration 2.)

The added charge need not be related to the original charge.⁷ But it is on the facts disclosed on the evidence before the committing Magistrate and on those facts alone that any action under this section can be taken.⁸ Further, the section refers to a case where the charge is defective at the time of commitment. Hence, an amendment or addition cannot be made under this section on the basis of additional evidence taken by the committing Magistrate under S. 219 after commitment.⁹

The power of the Sessions Judge to frame a charge under this section is not fettered by the fact that a complaint in respect of the offence for which he proposes to frame a charge has been dismissed by the Magistrate.¹⁰ But he cannot substitute a charge of adultery for one of rape framed by the Magistrate, the reason being that under S. 199 a charge of adultery cannot be taken cognizance of by any Court except upon a complaint of the husband or other persons mentioned therein.¹¹ (Compare S. 230.) The Sessions Judge has no power under the section to order the Magistrate to re-draw the charges.¹²

Where a case was remanded to a Court of Session by the High Court for trial on certain charges, it was held that the High Court did not intend to fetter the discretion of the Sessions Judge to amend the charges in any way he might think necessary.¹³

The fact that additional charges are framed by the Sessions Court does not make the questions at issue in the Sessions trial and in the preliminary inquiry substantially different and under S. 33 of the Evidence Act the evidence of witnesses who gave evidence in the preliminary inquiry and subsequently died may be admitted in the sessions trial.¹⁴

3. "Without a charge." — This section applies inter alia to cases in which a person is committed for trial without a charge. For instance, a commitment under S. 437 or S. 526 may be made without framing a charge.¹ In such cases, the Court of Session may itself frame a charge. It has been held that the expression applies not only to cases in which no charge has been framed at all by the committing Magistrate but also to cases in which a charge has been framed by him but there is no charge in respect of the offence which the Sessions Judge may think the prisoner ought to be tried for.²

4. "With an imperfect or erroneous charge." — The word "imperfect" implies defect in form.¹ The expression covers an imperfection due to a misjoinder of charges.² In the undermentioned case³

it was held by the Allahabad High Court that the fact that the evidence recorded by the committing Magistrate is such as to justify an additional head of charge being included does not make the charge as framed imperfect or erroneous and that the Sessions Court has no power under the section to add a charge. But this view, it is submitted, is not correct. See under Note 2.

1. Legislative changes. — The words "or add to" in sub-s.(1) were for the first time introduced in the present Code.

2. Scope of the section.—Section 226 applies to Sessions Courts and High Courts and is intended to apply to alterations or additions to the charge, at the commencement of the trial. This section applies to all Courts and is intended to apply to alterations or additions to the charge during the course of the trial.¹ In either case, however, the alterations or additions must be based on the facts disclosed by the evidence recorded,² the materials on which the Court acts under S. 226 being the evidence recorded before the committing Magistrate, and those on which the Court acts under this section being the evidence recorded before itself.³

There are certain cases in which it is not necessary to amend the charge and the accused can be convicted of an offence though he was not charged with it.⁴ See Ss. 237 and 238.

The word "alter" in the section includes a power to withdraw a charge.⁵ See also Note 4.

3. "Or add to."—These words were absent in the corresponding sections of the old Codes, and there was a conflict of opinions as to whether the word "alter" included the addition of a new charge.¹ It is now clear that a new charge may be added to the original charge even if it be unconnected in any way with the latter.² In the latter case, however, the trial cannot proceed forthwith but the Court should proceed under S. 229.

4. "May" — Discretion of Court. — The word "may" shows that the Court has a large discretion to alter or add to a charge framed under the Code.¹ In fact, the Magistrate must be ever ready, as the facts of the case are disclosed, to either alter or add to the charge, or to refer the case under S. 347.² It often happens that in the course of the evidence an offence more aggravated than the one complained of is discovered, and in such cases it is the duty of the Court to charge the accused with the more aggravated offence.³ The discretion is, however, a judicial one and must not be exercised arbitrarily.

The powers of the Court under this section are very wide and can be exercised even if the alteration of the charge leads necessarily to the discharge of the jury which has already been sworn in and empanelled.^{3a}

The section does not warrant the striking out of a charge for the purpose of curing an illegality which had already been committed and does not enable the Court to proceed on those charges only that have been legally joined.⁴ Thus, where the accused was charged with more than three offences committed in the course of a year, it was held that the trial was in contravention of S. 234 and that the illegality could not be cured by striking out the charges so as to reduce the number to three.⁵

Where, however, a charge is properly framed but it is found after taking evidence that it is groundless, it has been held that the Court is not prevented from striking out such charge.⁶

The alteration or addition of a charge must be for an offence made out by the evidence recorded in the course of the trial before the Court.⁷ In *Birendra Lal Bhaduri v. Emperor*⁸ it was observed :

"The Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction and, though vested with large powers of amending and adding to charges, can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment."

See also the undermentioned cases.⁹

Where an offence cannot be taken cognizance of without a complaint as required by ss. 198 and 199 of the Code, the Court cannot under S. 238 convict a person for such offence where there is no such complaint. It follows that in the absence of a complaint a charge cannot be altered into a charge for an offence which requires such complaint.¹⁰

It will not be a sound exercise of discretion under this section to add a serious charge after the defence evidence is heard and proceed with the case without allowing further time to the accused.¹¹ Again, where the charge is of a compoundable offence and the parties file a compromise, the Court should stay further proceedings and not frame charges subsequent to the application for leave to compromise.¹²

6. Time for alteration of or addition to charge. — A charge can be amended or altered or added to at any time —

(1) before judgment is pronounced, and

(2) in trials before the Court of Session or High Court before the verdict of the jury is returned, or the opinion of the assessors is expressed.¹

The words "return of the verdict" in the section mean the return of the final verdict which the Judge is finally bound to record.² The Judge has a discretion under S. 303 to question the jury as to the grounds of their verdict and no verdict can be said to be returned and finally recorded until the last of the questions has been answered.³ See also S. 304 Note 3.

7. Amendment of charge after remand. — It was held in the undermentioned cases¹ that the Court could, after remand by the superior Court, amend the charge, and that the remand order could not be intended to fetter this power.

7a. Amendment by Court of Session. — A Sessions Court is not a Court of original jurisdiction, and though it is vested with large powers for amending and adding to charges, it can only do so with reference to the immediate subject of the prosecution and committal and not with regard to a matter not covered by the indictment.¹ See

8. Application for alteration of charges. — An application for the alteration of or addition to the charge should be made as early as possible¹ and, in jury cases, before the jury is chosen.² Orders on such applications should be passed at the same time and not be postponed.³ The Court may refuse to entertain an application for amendment of a charge if made at a very late stage of the case.⁴ It may also be noted that in determining whether any error or omission in a charge has occasioned a failure of justice within the meaning of S. 537, the Court should have regard to the fact whether the objection could or should have been taken at an earlier stage in the proceedings.

9. Amendment—How made.— Amendments in a charge ought to be made formally, and should appear on the face of the record.¹ When a Magistrate amends a charge, he should not write over the original charge but should leave it on the file for reference if necessary and should write the new charge separately and correctly date it.²

10. Examination of accused after amendment. — It is not incumbent on the Court to re-examine the accused after the alteration of the charge under this section since the trial does not commence de novo so that if the accused has already been called on to enter on his defence there is no further obligation to examine him,¹ although some of the witnesses have been recalled under S. 231 subsequent to the alteration of the charge.²

11. Sub-section (2). — For similar provisions requiring the charge to be read and explained, see Ss. 210, 255 and 271.

This section deals with the alteration and addition of charges. The alterations must be read and explained to the accused who must know what he is charged with and what offence he has to answer. If the alteration is not read and explained to the accused and he is prejudiced in his defence, the conviction is illegal.¹ But where the accused was defended by a counsel who was asked whether he wanted a new trial and the latter did not want it, it was held that the accused was not prejudiced by the omission of the judge to read and explain the alteration in the charge.² Since the object of the provision is that the accused should have notice of any charge that he has to meet, he should not be called upon to meet additional charges without notice nor should he be convicted under charges different from those which he was called upon to meet.³

12. Appeal. — As to whether it is open to the Government to prefer an appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge refusing to amend or add new charges, see S. 417 Note 7.

13. Revision. — As has been seen already, the section confers a discretion on the Court to allow amendment of a charge. A Court of appeal or revision would always be slow to interfere with the exercise of such discretion unless it has been exercised perversely or arbitrarily. Thus, where the trial Court refused to alter the charge on the ground that the re-casting of charges would embarrass the jury and possibly prejudice the accused in his trial, it was held that it could not be said that such reason was capricious or involved any disregard of legal principles and that therefore the High Court would refuse to interfere with such discretion in appeal or revision.¹ Where an alteration in the charges occasions a failure of justice, the Court of revision may interfere.²

228.* If the charge framed or alteration or addition made under section 226 or section 227 is such that proceeding immediately with the trial is not likely, in the opinion of the Court, to prejudice the accused in his defence or the prosecutor in the conduct of the case, the Court may, in its discretion, after such charge or alteration or addition has been framed or made, proceed with the trial as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge. Section 228

When trial may proceed immediately after alteration.

1. Scope of the section. — Sections 228 to 231 provide that the accused or the prosecution shall not be embarrassed or prejudiced by the alteration of the charge under the previous section.¹ This section provides that if the amendment of the charge is of such a nature that proceeding immediately with the case is not likely to prejudice the prosecution or the defence, the trial may be proceeded with immediately. For instance, where the amended charge is closely related to the original charge, there is no objection to proceeding with the trial immediately.² In such a case, the section provides that the trial may be proceeded with "as if the new or altered charge had been the original charge." Hence, where originally different charges were laid against the two accused in a case and subsequently the charges were amended so that the two accused were charged with the same offence, it was held that the two accused could be said to be tried for the same offence within S. 30 of the Evidence Act and that, under that section, the confession of one of the co-accused could be taken into consideration against the other.³

direct a new trial or adjourn the trial for such period as may be necessary.

1. Scope of the section. — The previous section provides for the procedure to be followed when the amendment of a charge is of such a nature that proceeding with the trial immediately will not prejudice the accused or the prosecution. This section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases in which the amendment of the charge is of such a nature that proceeding immediately with the trial of the case will prejudice the prosecution or the accused. It provides that in such a case the trial should be adjourned or a retrial should be held.¹ Such re-trial can be directed by the trying Court itself and there is no need to refer the case to the High Court for this purpose.² Where it is doubtful whether proceeding immediately with the trial will prejudice the accused, the Court must lean in favour of holding that such procedure will prejudice the accused.³ Where the accused has not been given a proper opportunity of defending himself against the altered charge, the proceedings can be set aside and a retrial ordered.⁴

230.* If the offence stated in the new or altered or added charge is one for the prosecution of which previous sanction is necessary, the case shall not be proceeded with until such sanction is obtained, unless sanction has been already obtained for a prosecution on the same facts as those on which the new or altered charge is founded.

the Court may think material.¹ The section is mandatory and the Court is bound to allow the prosecution and the accused to re-call and examine any witness who may have been already examined.² The prosecution and the accused are entitled to re-call and examine any witness who may have been examined; the right is not confined to the witnesses on whose evidence the alteration in or addition to the charge may be based.³ The right of the prosecution and the accused in this respect is an absolute one and does not depend on the question whether the examination of the witnesses is necessary to avoid prejudice in the conduct of the case.⁴ But the Court is not bound to ask the accused or the prosecution if it is desired to re-call and examine any witness. If no application is made for the re-calling of any witnesses and their examination, it cannot be subsequently complained that the examination contemplated by the section was not allowed.⁵

A request to summon a fresh witness under this section can only be refused on the ground that the evidence of the witness is not thought by the Court to be material.⁶

The section applies to all cases where a charge is altered or added to after the commencement of a trial. Thus, even where a charge is amended under the directions of the High Court, the Court is bound to allow the examination mentioned in the section.⁷ But where in the course of a trial the Magistrate alters the charge and decides to commit the case to the sessions under section 347, the proceedings before the Magistrate should be only treated as commitment proceedings and not as a trial and the provisions of this section do not apply to them.⁸

(2) If the Court is of opinion that the facts of the case are such that no valid charge could be preferred against the accused in respect of the facts proved, it shall quash the conviction.

Illustration

A is convicted of an offence, under S. 196 of the Indian Penal Code, upon a charge which omits to state that he knew the evidence, which he corruptly used or attempted to use as true or genuine, was false or fabricated. If the Court thinks it probable that A had such knowledge, and that he was misled in his defence by the omission from the charge of the statement that he had it, it shall direct a new trial upon an amended charge; but, if it appears probable from the proceedings that A had no such knowledge, it shall quash the conviction.

1. Scope of the section.— This section provides for the procedure to be followed in cases where a person is convicted of an offence, and the Appellate Court or the High Court is of the opinion that he has been misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge. The section provides that in such cases a re-trial may be ordered on an amended charge.¹ Thus, where an accused is charged with one offence and convicted of a different offence without a charge being framed in respect of it, a re-trial can be ordered if it is found that he has been misled in his defence by the absence of a charge.² Similarly, where a charge is framed in the alternative form in a case in which the Code does not authorize the charge to be framed in such a form and the accused is thereby misled into pleading guilty to one of the offences instead of pleading not guilty to both the charges, a re-trial may be ordered.³ So also, section 221, sub-section (7) requires that where a previous conviction of the accused is intended to be used for the purpose of enhancing the sentence, the charge should specifically allege the previous conviction. If the charge omits to do so and, notwithstanding the omission, the accused, on conviction, is awarded higher punishment, the sentence is liable to be reduced on appeal.⁴

But where the accused has not been misled in his defence by the absence of the charge or the error in the charge, this section does not apply and the defect in the proceedings does not afford sufficient ground for ordering a re-trial.⁵ The fact that the accused was defended by a

Where a re-trial is ordered under this section, it must be from the point at which the irregularity occurred and not from the very beginning.⁷

The power of ordering a re-trial is not confined to this section. Such a power is also conferred by S. 423. This section refers to cases in which the accused has been convicted, while under S. 423 a re-trial can be ordered even in cases where the accused has been acquitted.⁸ Similarly, under S. 423 a re-trial can be ordered on grounds wider than those mentioned in this section. Thus, under S. 423 a re-trial can be ordered on the ground that the accused had no proper opportunity of defending himself⁹ (though the charge may be unexceptionable).

Sub-section (2) provides that the Appellate Court or the High Court, as the case may be, shall quash the conviction when it comes to the conclusion that, on the facts proved, no criminal charge can be laid against the accused.¹⁰ See also the undermentioned case,¹¹ where the Court declined to make an order for re-trial on the ground that the punishment already suffered by the accused was sufficient.

1. Joinder of charges and joint trials. — The law on the subject of joinder of charges and joint trials is contained in Ss. 233 to 239. Before the Code of 1872 there were no provisions corresponding to these, and the strict rules of the English Common Law as to the joinder of charges and joint trials were being followed. By Ss. 452 to 458 of the Code of 1872, which are reproduced with slight modifications in the present Code as sections 233 to 239, the Legislature considerably widened the powers of the Court as regards joinder of charges and joinder of defendants.¹

* Code of 1882 : S. 233 — Same as that of 1898 Code.

Code of 1872 : S. 452 — Substantially same.

Code of 1861 : S. 241.

241. When it appears to the Magistrate that the facts which can be established in evidence show the commission of two or more offences falling within the same section of the Indian Penal Code, the charge shall contain two or more heads charging such offences respectively.

Note 1

Section 233 lays down a general rule, viz., that for every distinct offence, of which any person is accused, there shall be a separate charge, and that every such charge shall be tried separately. To this rule ss. 234 to 239 are exceptions.² The object of making such exceptions is to avoid the necessity of the same witnesses giving the same evidence two or three times over in different trials, and to join in one trial those offences with regard to which the evidence would overlap.³ The sections are, however, so framed as to minimise the danger of prejudice to the accused by the joining together of more than one offence in the same trial.^{3a} Of these exceptions, Ss. 234 to 238 apply to cases where one person may be dealt with at one trial for more than one offence, while S. 239 applies to the trial of more persons than one jointly.⁴

The principles as to joinder of charges and joint trial of accused persons embodied in Ss. 233 to 239 are applicable to the trial of even summons cases⁵ and to inquiries under S. 107.⁶

Sections 233 to 239 refer only to the trial of the accused and not to a preliminary inquiry before a committing Magistrate and, therefore, no objection can be taken to the commitment on account of any misjoinder of charges or joint inquiry.⁷ See also Note 6.

The test whether a trial is or is not bad due to misjoinder of charges is not the number of offences of which the accused has been convicted but number of offences with which he has been charged. It is the multiplicity of charges which vitiates the trial and prejudices the accused in his defence.⁸

For a discussion on the question whether the exceptions under Ss. 234 to 239 are mutually exclusive, see S. 239 Note 2.

Where at the time of framing charges in a warrant case the Magistrate finds that to frame charges against all the accused will lead to a misjoinder of charges, he can in the exercise of his inherent power order that there should be a new trial in regard to some of the accused and is not bound to frame charges against them also at that stage.⁹

2. Scope and object of the section. — The provisions of this section are mandatory¹ and must be strictly applied.² Separate trial is the rule and joint trial the exception.³ The exceptions provided for are only empowering sections and must be strictly construed and applied so as not to defeat the right of independent trial conferred by this section.⁴

The object of the section (which has been enacted for the benefit of the accused)^{4a} in requiring that there shall be a separate charge for every distinct offence and a separate trial for every charge is twofold: firstly, to give the accused notice of the charges which he has to meet and secondly, to see that he is not embarrassed by having to meet charges in no way connected with one another.⁵ Another object is to prevent the mind of the Court from being prejudiced against the accused, if he were tried in one trial upon different charges resting on different evidence.⁶ In other words, the object is to prevent the inconvenience of hearing together of such a number of instances of culpability and the consequent embarrassment both to the Judge and to the accused.⁷

was one which could not be cured by S. 537. Their Lordships observed as follows :

"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than, by law, could have been joined together in one indictment. The illustration to the section itself sufficiently shows what was meant.

"The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that, when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted, this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission or irregularity."

The question has arisen as to how far this decision is applicable to a disobedience of the directions of this section. The section directs two things, namely :

1. that for every distinct offence of which any person is accused there shall be a separate charge, and
2. that every such charge shall be tried separately unless the case falls within the classes of cases mentioned in Ss. 234, 235, 236 and 239.

Where a single charge is framed for several distinct offences and a single trial is held in respect of such charge and the case does not fall within Ss. 234, 235, 236 or 239, there is a non-compliance both as regards the framing of the charge and as regards the mode of trial. Where separate charges are framed for the distinct offences but a single trial is held in respect of all such charges and the case is not governed by Ss. 234, 235, 236 or 239, there is a non-compliance with the section as to the mode of trial. Where a single charge is framed for several distinct offences and a single trial is held in respect of such charge and the case falls within Ss. 234, 235, 236 or 239, there is a non-compliance as regards the framing of the charge, but not with regard to the mode of trial. It has been held that a non-compliance of the first kind is governed by the rule enunciated in Subramaniya Iyer's case and is an illegality not cured by S. 537;² so also is a non-compliance of the second kind.^{2a} But a non-compliance of the third

6. Counter-cases. — The joint trial of two parties arrayed against each other in a riot at one and the same trial is altogether illegal and void under this section.¹ It has been held that even committals in such cases should be made separately and not all together, though it is in the power of the Sessions Judge to try them separately in spite of the joint committal.² Nor can the evidence for the prosecution in one case be used as evidence for the defence in the other case and vice versa.^{2a}

A simultaneous trial of a case and a counter-case is not a joint trial and is not prohibited by the Code.

A simultaneous trial in certain cases and in certain circumstances might be irregular and improper but that would not entitle the accused to have the whole trial set aside, unless the procedure adopted had prejudiced him in his defence.³ The proper course to pursue is to give each party or faction a separate trial so as to enable its several members to be examined as witnesses in the case in which they are the complainants.⁴

The question as to which case ought to be taken first, depends upon the circumstances of each case. For instance, the case against a person should be taken up first before the case in which he is the complainant, as it is not fair to force a person to throw himself open to cross-examination by the other side,⁵ or again if one case looks on its face stronger than the other, it can be heard first.⁶ No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the procedure to be followed. There is nothing irregular in the judge trying each case to its conclusion and then pronouncing judgment in both. But it is necessary that —

- (1) the trial should be separate and the judgments should be separately delivered;
- (2) the conclusion in each case must be founded on and only on the evidence in that case; and,
- (3) the judge must keep his hands free and not commit himself to a decision one way or another and must detach himself from extraneous considerations.⁷

Again, simultaneous trials of the two cases before two different Courts over one and the same occurrence are undesirable and both cases should be tried by one Magistrate or Judge one after the other.⁹

1. Legislative changes.

Changes made in the Code of 1882 —

The words "committed within the space of twelve months from the first to the last of such offences" were substituted for the words

Code of 1872 : S. 453.

More offences than one of same kind may be charged within a year of each other. 453. When a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind; committed within one year of each other, he may be charged and tried at the same time for any number of them not exceeding three.

Explanation : — Offences are said to be of the same kind under this section if they fall within the provisions of section four hundred and fifty five.

Code of 1861 — Nil.

Section 234
Notes 1-4

"committed within one year of each other" occurring in the Code of 1872.

Changes made by Act XVIII of 1923 —

1. In sub-s.(1) after the words "such offences" the words "whether in respect of the same person or not" have been added.
2. The proviso to sub-s. (2) is new.

2. Section applies to trials and not to committals. — The section refers to a trial and not to a commitment. So, where an accused is committed to trial on more than three charges, the commitment is not illegal, as the Sessions Judge can limit the trial to three charges only.¹

3. 'Person,' if includes 'persons.' — See Note 5a to S. 239.

4. "Whether in respect of the same person or not." — Before the amendment of 1923, there was a conflict of opinions as to whether the section was applicable to cases of offences committed against several persons, one set of cases holding that it applied only when the offences were committed against the same person¹ and another set holding that there was no such restriction and that it applied in all cases, whether the offences were committed against the same person or against different persons.² The addition of the words "whether in respect of the same person or not" has removed this conflict and a person can now be charged for offences of the same kind not exceeding three within a year, even if they were committed against several persons.³

5. "More offences than one." — The section applies only where a person is accused of more offences than one of the same kind, and not where he is charged with only one offence. A trial for such offence is not barred even though such offence is based upon various acts which by themselves are offences, and which extend beyond a period of one year. In other words, the word "offence" in the section is not intended to include every act so connected with that offence as to form part of the same transaction.¹

Note 5

Illustrations

1. A is charged with an offence under S. 401 of the Penal Code. It is based on several offences of theft and various acts of association extending over more than one year. The trial is not bad under this section. The reason is that the gist of the offence under S. 401 is association for the purpose of habitually committing theft or robbery and habit is to be proved by the aggregate of acts extending, it may be, over many years.²

2. A is charged with the offence of waging war under S. 121 of the Penal Code, based upon seventeen separate incidents ranging over a period of fifteen months. The trial is not bad inasmuch as the offence under S. 121 is a single continuing offence.³

3. A is charged with the offence of falsification of accounts under S. 477A, Penal Code. Prosecution is not restricted to only three instances of falsification but any number of false entries or omission of entries may be proved.^{3a}

The section refers to "offences" and limits the trial to three offences. "An offence" is defined in S. 4(o) as an act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force. A single act or omission will be only one offence though chargeable under several sections of the Penal Code. Thus, the printing of a seditious article on a particular date is only one offence though the accused may be charged therefor under Ss. 124A and 153A. The printing of another article of a similar nature on another date is another offence chargeable under the same two sections and of the same nature as the first. The two offences can therefore be tried together at one trial under this section.⁴ This section does not allow a single trial in respect of two transactions of the same kind, each of such transactions being made up of offences of different kinds. Thus, when A was charged: (1) with abetting of forgery in respect of the service of summons alleged to have been served on 21-10-1914; (2) with swearing a false affidavit with regard to the service of such summons; (3) with abetment of forgery in respect of the service of summons alleged to have been served on 22-1-1915; and (4) with swearing a false affidavit as to the service of the latter summons, it was held that S. 234 did not apply and that the trial was bad,⁵ inasmuch as there were four offences not of the same kind, though there were two transactions of the same kind, namely in respect of the two summonses.

The section bars only a single trial of more than three offences of the same kind committed within the space of a year. It does not mean that if the accused had committed fifty offences in the course of twelve months, only three shall be tried and the rest abandoned. He may be tried in batches of three at each trial under separate charges.⁶ Further, the section merely authorises a combination of three offences in one trial. It does not bar a separate trial of the accused for each separate offence.⁷ Moreover, the effect of the section is not to make the three offences which are tried together under its provisions, one offence. The offences continue to be separate though there is only one trial for all of them.⁸

6. "Committed within the space of twelve months." — The Section provides for a single trial of offences committed within the space of twelve months. If the offences extend over a period longer than a year, a single trial therefor is illegal as contravening the provisions of this section, and the defect is not curable under section 537.¹

7. "Not exceeding three." — An accused can under the section, be charged and tried at one trial for offences of the same kind not exceeding three. A trial for more than three offences committed during the year, is contrary to the provisions of this section and is an illegality and not merely an irregularity covered by S. 537.¹ Where a person is

9. Proviso. — The proviso lays down specifically that an attempt to commit an offence is of the same kind as the actual offence, when such attempt is itself an offence. It also provides that offences under ss. 379 and 380 of the Penal Code are of the same kind even though punishable under different sections and with different punishments, thus overruling the view held in the undermentioned cases¹ that they were not offences of the same kind.

Code of 1872 : S. 454.

454. I.—If in one set of facts, so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person, he may be charged with and tried for every such offence at the same time.

II.—If a single act falls within two separate definitions of any law in force for the time being, by which offences are defined or punished the person who does it may be charged with each of the offences so committed, but he must not receive a more severe punishment than could be awarded, by the Court which tries him, for either.

III.—If several acts, of which one or more than one would by itself constitute an offence, form, when combined, an offence under the provisions of any law in force for the time being, by which offences are defined or punished a person who does them may be charged with every offence which he may have committed, but he must not receive for such offences, collectively, a punishment more severe than that which might have been awarded, by the Court trying him, for any one of such offences, or for the offence formed by their combination.

1. Scope of the section. — This section is another exception to the rule in S. 233 that there should be a separate trial for every offence charged. Where the case falls within this section, a single trial for more offences than one is legal. The exception only extends, however, to the trial and not to the framing of charges. The general rule that every offence should be charged separately applies, though there may be one trial for all such offences under the provisions of the section.¹ See also Note 4 under S. 233.

2. "Same transaction" — Sub-section (1). — Sub-section (1) provides that an accused person may be charged with and tried at one trial for any number of offences which he is alleged to have committed in one series of acts so connected together as to form part of the "same transaction."¹ The expression "same transaction" has, however, not been defined in the Code. From its very nature the word "transaction" is incapable of exact definition and appears to have been purposely used because it has this quality.² It should be interpreted, not in any special or technical way, but in its ordinary etymological meaning³ of "an affair" or "a carrying through."⁴ The Court may also look for guidance to the illustrations to the section, remembering, however, that those illustrations are not exhaustive.⁵ In *Emperor v. the interval may be an important element in determining the question of connexion between the several acts.¹¹ The transaction itself need not be a criminal transaction; an offence can be committed in the course of a transaction the aim of which is perfectly legitimate.^{11a} It has, however, been held in the undermentioned cases^{11b} that proximity of time is also necessary in order to constitute the acts parts of the same transaction.

Although according to the test mentioned above, community of action and purpose is necessary in order to constitute the several acts, parts of the same transaction, the mere existence of some general purpose or design, such as defrauding the public, is not sufficient. The purpose must be something particular and definite.¹² The words "continuity of action" do not mean merely doing the same thing or similar things continuously or repeatedly, for, a recurring series of similar transactions is not, according to the ordinary use of language, the same transaction. The words mean "the following up of some initial act through all its consequences and incidents until the series of acts or group of connected acts comes to an end, either by attainment of the object or by being put an end to or abandoned. If any of those things happens and the whole process is begun over again, it is not the same transaction but a new one in spite of the fact that the same general purpose may continue."^{12a}

When a person is charged with two offences and the evidence to prove the one offence is identical with that by which the other is to be established, then the two must be held to have been committed in the course of the same transaction.^{12b}

It will be clear from the above discussion that the question as to what does or does not form part of the same transaction is a question of fact¹³ depending largely upon the circumstances of each case.¹⁴ As pointed out by Sadasiva Iyer, J., in *Kumaramuthu v. Emperor*¹⁵:

"Different judicial minds might, where the facts are complicated, arrive at different conclusions as to whether a particular complicated series of acts were committed in the same transaction or not and one can very well conceive many sets of facts which are on the border-line."

Thus, the offence of hiring a person to take part in a riot is a separate and distinct offence from the riot itself and, ordinarily, the hiring and the riot would be separate transactions. There may, however, be circumstances which might justify the Court in holding that the alleged hiring or employing and the riot were parts of the same transaction.¹⁶

Where an offence is committed, the object of which is the concealment of another offence already committed or about to be committed, the two would ordinarily be considered to form parts of the same transaction.¹⁷ Thus, a criminal misappropriation or a criminal breach of trust and a falsification of accounts for the purpose of concealing the former offence, or a charge of murder and of causing evidence thereof to disappear, or causing grievous hurt with the object of extorting a confession from a person and after his death forging entries to conceal the cause of death or misappropriation of ornament by a police-officer and subsequent alteration of entries in the police diaries to conceal the fact of misappropriation, will be considered to form parts of the same transaction.¹⁸ Similarly, where a gang of dacoits lie concealed waiting for nightfall in order to commit dacoity, but

3. "More offences than one." — The section is not controlled by s. 234. There is nothing in the section to warrant the rule that not more than three offences can be combined even if those offences have been committed in the course of the same transaction.¹ Nor is a trial illegal by reason of containing more than three offences spread over a period longer than a year.² But a multitude of accusations which will result in bewildering the accused and prejudicing him in his defence ought not to be permitted.³

4. "Are committed by the same person." — The expression "by the same person" indicates that where there are more than one accused, this section is inapplicable. To such cases s. 239 will apply. See Notes to s. 233.

5. "May be tried at one trial." — The provisions of this section are only enabling and not imperative and therefore, though they provide for a joint trial, yet a separate trial for each of the offences is not illegal.¹ As a matter of fact, if there is a risk of embarrassing the defence, a joinder of charges should not be resorted to.² Nor is it necessary that the accused should be tried for all the offences committed by the same acts. Thus, where the accused, by a speech abets an offence under s. 122 of the Penal Code and by the same speech also abets the offence of dacoity, he can be tried for each of the offences under this section, but as this section is controlled as regards the offence against the State under S. 122, by the provisions of S. 196 of the Code, its operation in this case could be restricted to the offence of dacoity alone.³ A joint trial of several offences in cases not authorised by the Code is an illegality and not merely an irregularity.⁴ (See Notes under section 233.)

6. "Trial" includes conviction. — The word "trial" in this section includes conviction.¹

7. Sub-section (2). — Where the same facts will constitute different offences, this sub-section authorizes a combined trial in respect of all of them.¹ Thus, where a girl of fifteen went out of her husband's hut at night and the accused seized her and took her away, the act will amount to an offence both of kidnapping and abduction and under sub-s.(2) can be tried at one trial.² But, under S. 71, Penal Code, the offender cannot be punished with a more severe punishment than can be awarded for any one of the offences constituted.³

8. "Constitute, when combined, a different offence" — Sub-section (3).—An offence of theft under S. 379 of the Penal Code and an offence of taking a gift to restore stolen property under S. 215 of the Penal Code cannot be said to form, when combined, a different offence.¹ An offence under S. 143 (unlawful assembly) and an offence under S. 353 (assault on a public servant) may, when combined, become an offence under S. 147.² See also the undermentioned case.³

12. Failure to charge under sub-section (1)—Subsequent trial therefor — Section 403 — See S. 403 and Notes thereto.

13. Joint trial for several charges not forming part of same transaction — Effect. — A joint trial of several charges in respect of acts not forming parts of the same transaction is illegal and is not cured by S. 537.¹ See also S. 233 Note 5, S. 234 Note 7 and S. 537 Note 10.

14. Offences forming part of same transaction—Jurisdiction to try. — The accused were charged under S. 420 read with S. 120B, Penal Code. The conspiracy was entered into at B where the accused lived, but one or two acts of cheating were committed within the jurisdiction of the Court at P. It was held that the Court at P could not be clothed with jurisdiction to try the charge of conspiracy merely because the conspiracy and the different acts of cheating might form part of the same transaction.¹ See also Note 3 under S. 177.

1. Scope of the section. — This section and the next form another exception to the general rule enacted in S. 233 that every charge shall be tried separately. They deal with a class of cases, which the language of S. 235 may fail to cover.¹ The stage at which this section applies is before the evidence is gone into in the case, in other words, before the trial begins. If at that stage the prosecution relies on certain facts, the proof of which is in its possession, and such facts give rise to an inference that the accused must have committed some one of several offences but it is not clear, in the absence of further facts, which one of them it is, the case falls under this section and the next.² To take an illustrative case: Suppose before the trial begins the prosecution relies on the following facts as those which can be proved in the case:

- (1) that certain moveable property was stolen from the house of X;
- (2) that the accused was in possession thereof; and
- (3) that the accused is unable to explain such possession.

These facts are not consistent with the innocence of the accused person, but give rise to an inference that he has committed some offence, and that it may either be theft punishable under S. 379 of the Penal Code or the offence of receiving stolen property punishable under S. 411 of the Penal Code. It is, however, doubtful, without further facts, which one of the said two offences he has committed. This section applies to such a case and the accused may be charged cumulatively with the offence of theft as well as of receiving stolen property or may be charged in the alternative, with the offence of theft or of receiving stolen property.^{2a}

Where a charge is framed under this section, as in the above illustration, either cumulatively or in the alternative, and the trial proceeds, and on the further facts disclosed in the evidence the doubt which existed at the beginning of the trial disappears, the accused should be convicted of the offence which has been proved to have been committed by him.³

Where on such a charge the trial proceeds and at the end thereof the Court is still doubtful on the facts proved which one of the offences charged has been committed by the accused, though it is clear that one or other of them must have been committed, the Court

Where, in the above illustrative case, a charge is framed for theft only, but in the evidence in the trial it is proved that the accused is guilty only of receiving stolen property, he may be convicted of the latter offence though not charged with it, inasmuch as he could, on the facts relied upon at the beginning of the trial, have been charged under this section.⁵ (See S. 237.) Section 236
Note 1

Where, in the illustrative case, a charge is framed for theft only and the accused is, after trial, convicted or acquitted of it, he cannot, under the provisions of sub-s.(1) of S. 403, be subsequently tried on the same facts, for receiving stolen property, inasmuch as he might have been tried under this section, or convicted under S. 237, of this offence in the previous case itself.⁷ The cases cited below⁸ have all been decided on this principle.

A charge might therefore be framed under this section for both offences.⁹ But if the facts charged are that a girl over 16 years of age was forcibly taken away by the accused, the only offence for which the accused could be charged is abduction and not kidnapping.¹⁰ There being no doubt as to which offence was committed, this section does not apply.

- (3) Where the facts relied upon are not inconsistent with the innocence of the accused. i. e., where such facts do not amount to an offence at all.¹³
- (4) Where the prosecution is itself not clear as to what facts it will rely upon.¹⁴ Thus, where the accused, five in number, are alleged to have assaulted either with one object or with another, and the facts relied upon to establish an offence are themselves in doubt, this section does not apply.^{14a}

It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹⁵ that the 'doubt' in this section does not mean doubt as to facts but means 'doubt' as to questions of law, such as which section of the penal law applies. It is submitted that this view is not correct. The illustrations to the section themselves show that the doubts in those cases are not doubts as to questions of law, but only as to questions of fact.^{15a} To this extent, however, the proposition would be correct, namely, that the section has no application where the facts relied upon by the prosecution are themselves in doubt.¹⁶ It is not necessary for the application of this section that the several offences should fall under the same chapter of the Penal Code.^{16a}

It has also been held in another class of cases that the several offences which the facts may constitute should be cognate offences¹⁷ or offences which differ in degree by reason of the difference in intention or by reason of subsidiary aggravating circumstances.¹⁸ This view also, it is submitted, is not correct and is not authorised by the terms of the section.

It was observed in the undermentioned cases¹⁹ that the section applies only where from the evidence led by the prosecution it is doubtful which of several offences have been committed by the accused. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Such a case is really covered by section 367, sub-section (3).

See also the case cited below.²⁰

2. "Which of several offences." — This section applies even where the doubt is whether the accused committed one offence only or both that offence and another. Where A gives false information of theft in a house and states that he suspects B of the offence, it is clear that he commits an offence under S. 182 of the Penal Code, but it is doubtful if the information will amount to the making of a false charge against B punishable under S. 211 of the Penal Code. It has been held that this section will apply even to such cases.¹

Under the Code of 1861, a charge under the section corresponding to this section could be framed only in respect of offences under the Indian Penal Code.² Under the present Code this is no longer necessary.³

- (1) that certain property was stolen,
- (2) that A took gratification for its restoration, and
- (3) that he took no steps for its restoration or to cause the offender to be apprehended, the only inference possible is that A committed an offence under S. 215 of the Penal Code. It cannot be an inference that, because A asked for a gratification for its return, he is the thief. There being therefore no "doubt" such as is contemplated by the section, A cannot be charged for theft along with the offence under S. 215 of the Penal Code.¹ If however, in the above case, there is the additional fact that he restored the property but did not take steps to cause the offender to be apprehended, there will be a doubt as to whether he was not the thief seeing that he was in possession of the stolen property. In such a case an alternative charge for theft or for an offence under S. 215 may be framed.²

not only where the statements are made on two distinct occasions but also where they are made on the same occasion, as for example, in the same deposition.²

An alternative charge in respect of two contradictory statements can be framed under this section only when the prosecution is unable to prove which of the two statements is false.³

No charge in the alternative can be made, when one of the statements has been made in circumstances in which the person making it is not bound by law to state the truth, as for example:

- (1) when the statement is made in a petition;⁴
- (2) when it is made in an examination by a Magistrate for the purpose of obtaining information, not liable to be on oath;⁵
- (3) when it is made to the police under S. 161 of the Code, as to which see Note 9 to S. 161;
- (4) when an amin reports to a civil Court executing a decree complaining of obstruction;⁶ or
- (5) when it is inadmissible in evidence as being one made under improper influence such as police threat and ill-treatment.⁷

Where an accused person entered in a sale deed, executed by him, the consideration as Rs. 1475 and in a subsequent suit for pre-emption stated in evidence that the consideration was only Rs. 900, it was held that the Court could charge accused under S. 193 or S. 423, Penal Code.⁸

removing the body for the purpose of screening the offender, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that though the charge against the accused was only under S. 302 of the Penal Code, he could be convicted under S. 201 of the Penal Code, if the evidence established that offence. Their Lordships observed:

"A man may be convicted of an offence, although there has been no charge in respect of it, if the evidence is such as to establish a charge that might have been made. That is what happened here. The three men who were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment, were convicted of making away with the evidence of the crime by assisting in taking away the body. They were not charged with that formally, but they were tried on evidence which brings the case under S. 237."

The same view has been held in the undermentioned cases.²

7. Murder, culpable homicide not amounting to murder and causing death by negligence. — Where the facts relied upon give rise to an inference of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder, a charge may be framed under the section either cumulatively or alternatively¹ for murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Notes 7-9 cumulatively, it cannot be framed alternatively in respect of the two offences. It is submitted that the last two views are not correct.

8. Principal offence and the abetment thereof.—The question whether an offence and its abetment could both be charged under the provisions of this section depends, as has been seen in Note 1, on the facts relied upon by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial and on which charges are invited to be framed. A person may be convicted of abetment of an offence, even if he is charged with the substantive offence and vice versa, if the facts relied upon could have supported a charge for that offence.¹

The view taken in the undermentioned cases² that an offence of abetment and the principal offence cannot come within this section is, it is submitted, not correct.

9. Alternative charges.—A charge even in the alternative must conform to the provisions of Ss. 233, 234, 235 or S. 239 and each of the alternative charges must be a legal charge.¹

Alternative charges should be framed as in form given in schedule V, No. 28, sub-head II.² When the charges are of distinct offences such as kidnapping and abduction, it is desirable that the accused should be charged separately for kidnapping and abduction.³ Omission to split up the charge into two parts does not, however, amount to material error, unless the accused is thereby prejudiced in his defence.⁴

See also Note 7.

10. Sentence. — Where an accused is convicted of two offences alternatively, the sentence should be considered from the point of view of the maximum sentence provided for the lesser of the two alternative offences.¹ This is so even where a person is charged under two parts of the same section, one carrying a higher and the other a lighter punishment.²

11. "Series of acts," meaning of. — It has been held in the undermentioned case¹ that a statement made in the evidence in a civil suit and a statement made in the evidence in a criminal case cannot be considered to be a "series of acts" within the meaning of the section and that the person making such statement cannot therefore be prosecuted under this section for giving false evidence on the basis of such contradictory statements. It is submitted that this view cannot be accepted as correct. If, as the decision concedes, a statement before the police and a subsequent statement before the Magistrate could form a "series of acts," it is difficult to see how a statement in a civil Court and a statement in a criminal Court are not a "series of acts."

1. Legislative changes.

Changes made in the Code of 1898 —

Sub-section (2) was newly added.

Changes made in 1923 —

Sub-section (2) was omitted and inserted as sub-s.(2A) to S. 238 by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

2. Scope of the section. — The general rule is that an accused person cannot be convicted of an offence of which he was not charged, and of which consequently he has had no notice. This section, however, enables the Court to convict a person of an offence which is disclosed in the evidence and for which he might have been charged under the provisions of section 236, although he was not charged with it. The reason of the rule is that the facts relied upon by the prosecution at the beginning of the trial, of which he has notice, are sufficient notice of all offences which such facts will constitute.

The section will apply, therefore, only in cases falling within S. 236.¹ For cases in which a conviction has been given under this section without framing a charge therefor, see Note 1 to S. 236.² In cases where S. 236 has no application as, for instance, where the offence which of several offences such facts would constitute. See also the undermentioned case.⁷

The Chief Court of Oudh has also held that it is not illegal to convict a person of an offence under S. 452, Penal Code, in a case in which he has been charged under S. 323, in the light of the wording of this section and S. 236, but that the question to be decided in each case is whether the accused has or has not been prejudiced in his trial by the fact that the charge was framed under the wrong section.⁸

Where a Court finds it necessary to make use of the section to convict an accused person of an offence with which he has not been charged, it should be particularly careful to formulate in its own mind the charge upon which, had it been duly framed, it would be prepared to convict.⁹

2a. Illustration. — The illustration to the section only applies to the class of cases referred to in S. 236 and does not refer to cases in which there is no doubt as to what offence has been committed on the facts relied on by the prosecution, but it is merely doubtful which offence will be proved (see Note 1 under S. 236). This section is therefore no authority for holding that in such cases, on a charge of one offence, a person can be convicted of a different offence.¹

3. Conviction for offence requiring complaint by specified persons. — Where a person is charged with offence A on facts on which he might have been charged also with offence B under S. 236, but the latter offence is one which could not be taken cognizance of by the Court in the absence of a complaint by the aggrieved person, it has been held that he could not be convicted of offence B under this section in the absence of such complaint.¹

1. Scope and principle of the section. — The section contemplates a conviction of a minor offence included in the offence charged in either of two cases. The first is where the offence charged consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence and such combination is proved but the remaining particulars are not proved.¹ The second is where facts are proved which reduce the offence charged to a minor offence.² Illustration (a) to the section is an example of the first class of cases and illustration (b), of the second.³

The principle on which the section proceeds is that where an offence consists of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, the graver charge gives notice to the accused of all the circumstances going to constitute the minor offence of which he may be convicted. The latter is arrived at by mere subtraction from the former. But when the circumstances constituting the major charge do not necessarily and according to the definition of the offence imputed by that charge, constitute the minor offence also, the principle no longer applies, because notice of the former does not necessarily involve notice of all that constitutes the latter.⁴

The section is an exception to the rule that a person cannot be convicted of an offence with which he is not charged.⁵ Therefore, though under this section an accused person can be convicted of an offence different from that he was accused of, it should be done only in cases where the accused is not prejudiced in any way by the conviction on the new charge.⁶ Thus, where the accused is charged under S. 457,

Penal Code, for criminal trespass with intent to commit theft and where he denies the trespass, he cannot be convicted of criminal trespass with intent to commit adultery under S. 456, Penal Code, because, upon the case for prosecution and on the line of defence adopted by the accused, the latter cannot be said to have any knowledge of the charge of which he is convicted and would therefore be prejudiced in his defence.⁷ But where in such a case the accused himself admits trespass but states that it was with the intention of committing adultery and not theft, he cannot be held to be, in any way, prejudiced, inasmuch as in order to sustain a conviction under S. 456, it is not necessary to specify any criminal intention. It is sufficient if a guilty intention is proved such as is contemplated in S. 441 of the Penal Code.⁸

Though the section enables a Court to convict a person of a minor offence, when charged with a major offence, there is no provision of law which allows the converse case, viz., the conviction for a major offence on a charge of a minor one.⁹

The powers given by this section are not controlled by the sections of the Code which prescribe the procedure to be followed in trying the offence charged and have nothing to do with the form of the trial nor with the convicting authority.¹⁰ Thus, the section invests a jury empanelled to try an offence triable by a jury to find as an incident that the facts proved amount to a minor offence and return a verdict of guilty or not guilty of such offence,¹¹ though such offence may not be triable by jury but is triable only with assessors.¹² In the same way,

it empowers a Court trying an accused person for an offence with the aid of assessors to convict him for a minor offence triable by jury; care should, however, be taken to frame a charge for the minor offence, where the facts indicate a reasonable possibility of the minor offence being made out, so that from the beginning the trial may proceed according to the provisions of the Code and the parties concerned may have an opportunity to object to the trial if so advised.¹³ But the section has no application to cases where there is no conviction by the jury of the minor offence. Thus, where on a charge under S. 304, Penal Code, the jury returned a verdict of not guilty, but returned a verdict of "guilty but not voluntarily" under S. 326, the verdict amounts to only a verdict of "not guilty" under S. 326 and this section has no application to such a case.¹⁴

2. "Minor offence."—The words "minor offence" are not defined anywhere in the Code and ought to be taken in their ordinary sense and not in any technical sense.¹ In the undermentioned case^{1a} a single Judge of the Bombay High Court observed as follows:

"I do not think the argument relied upon is sound. It seems to me to proceed on the unwarranted assumption that the test by which an offence is deemed in S. 238 (1) to be major or minor is the gravity of the punishment incurred. The sub-section does not refer to the gravity of punishment at all; it merely refers to the number of particulars constituting the offence: if a number of particulars is needed to constitute the offence, then for the purposes of S. 238 (1), it may be called the major offence: if a combination of some only of such particulars constitutes a complete offence then that offence is referred to in S. 238 (1) as the minor offence. I do not overlook that S. 238, sub-section (2) speaks of the proof of additional facts reducing an offence to a minor offence, and this does not accord with the view that the minor offence must always consist of fewer particulars than the major offence. But this is only a new form that the situation takes."

It is submitted that the view propounded would make the word "minor" in sub-section (1) superfluous, and is not correct. Further, it

Rioting and unlawful assembly.—A charge of rioting under s. 147 or of being a member of an unlawful assembly under s. 149, does not by itself or by being charged together with a charge of hurt, include as a minor offence an act of violence by an individual accused so as to authorise under this section a conviction under s. 323⁵ or s. 325⁶ or s. 326⁷ or for assault under s. 352⁸ or for criminal trespass.⁹ The High Court of Madras has, however, held that a conviction on the substantive charge only, on a charge coupled with s. 149, Penal Code, is not necessarily bad, the legality of the conviction depending on whether the accused has or has not been materially prejudiced by the form of the charge.¹⁰ The Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court has also held that a person can be convicted of the offence of causing hurt although the charge is formulated as for the commission of an offence punishable under s. 307, Penal Code, read with s. 149.¹¹ The Lahore High

3. Attempt — Sub-section (2A). — Under Act XVIII of 1923, sub-s.(2) of S. 237 has been transferred to this section and re-enacted as sub-s.(2A), as more appropriate here than under S. 237.

Under this sub-section, when a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although he is not separately charged with the attempt.¹

4. When minor offence requires complaint—Sub-section (3). — This section must be read subject to Ss. 198 and 199 which require the complaint of the aggrieved person, before the Court can take cognizance of offences referred to therein.

A person charged with one offence cannot, therefore, be convicted of a minor offence if the latter requires a complaint by a particular person mentioned in Ss. 198 and 199 of the Code, when there is no such complaint. Thus, a prosecution for adultery under S. 497 or for enticing away a married woman under S. 498 requires a complaint by the husband and therefore, a person charged with rape or abduction cannot be convicted either under S. 497¹ or under S. 498² in the absence of a complaint by the husband. Similarly, no conviction can be made under S. 498 when the complaint was specifically made under S. 497 only.³ So also, no conviction can be made under S. 500 for defamation in the absence of a complaint by the person aggrieved, where the complaint was under Ss. 353 and 504⁴ or under S. 501, Penal Code.⁵ It has victing the accused of the offence punishable under S. 307 or any other minor offence constituted by the same facts.)

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — This is the last exception to the rule enacted in S. 233 that every offence must be tried separately. It is only under this section that the joint trial of several accused persons is permissible.¹

The section applies only to trials and not to enquiries. It is not illegal, therefore, to jointly commit several accused persons for offences not falling within the provisions of this section,² though it should, as a matter of prudence, be avoided.³

Notes 1-2

Inquiries under chapter VIII stand on a somewhat different footing. Under S. 117 of the Code, such inquiries have to be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials. Section 239 will apply to such inquiries and a joint inquiry of several persons proceeded against under chapter VIII would be illegal if the case does not come within the terms of this section.^{3a}

The section is subject to the rules as to jurisdiction laid down in chapter XV and consequently a Magistrate cannot try persons for offences committed outside his jurisdiction, though otherwise the case may fall within the provisions of this section.⁴

The provisions of the section refer to persons accused, that is to say, charged. The provisions are, therefore, intended to deal with the position as it exists at the time of charge, and not with the result of the trial. Hence, a joint trial of several persons under this section is not vitiated merely by the fact that at the end of the trial the facts found happen to be different from those on the footing of which the charges were originally framed.⁵

2. Whether Sections 234, 235, 236 and 239 are mutually exclusive.

Section 239 and Ss. 234 to 236. — It has been generally held that the provisions of this section and Ss. 234 to 236 may be applied cumulatively to a case, so that where two or more persons can be jointly tried under this section for certain offences, it is permissible to add as against one of such persons charges which could be added under Ss. 234 to 236 if he were being tried alone.

There is no objection to the joinder of a charge for this other offence against A in the same trial. (Section 235).¹

2. A and B commit a certain offence and as such are liable to be tried together under clause (a) of this section. There is no objection to joining against

See also Note 5a.

But the provisions of this section are not controlled by Ss. 234 to 236.⁵ In other words, the circumstances under which a joint trial is permissible under this section cannot be restricted by considerations based on Ss. 234 to 236.

Sections 235 and 236. — Sections 235 and 236 may apply to the same case. Thus, where several charges have been rightly joined against the same accused under S. 235, there can be no objection to one of such charges being in the alternative under S. 236.⁶

Note 2

Section 234 and Ss. 235 and 236. — A, B and C are offences of the same kind, as for example, several acts of breach of trust. D is an offence which forms part of the same transaction as A, as for example, falsification of accounts to conceal the offence A. Similarly, E and F are parts of the same transaction as B and C respectively. Under S. 234, A, B and C could be tried in one trial as being offences of the same kind. Under S. 235, A and D could be tried together at one trial as forming parts of the same transaction. So also, B and E and C and F. But can A, B, C, D, E and F be all tried together in the same trial by virtue of Ss. 234 and 235 read together? The general view is that they cannot.⁷ Where, however, several acts of misappropriation are lumped together in a single charge under S. 222 (2), it has been held that the acts of falsification of accounts committed for the purpose of concealing the former offence will constitute parts of the same transaction as such offence and can be tried at the same trial.⁸

Where a person is charged with several offences under S. 234, there is no objection to his being tried on additional charges framed under S. 235 (2) or S. 236.⁹

But the observation really only means in this case that S. 236 does not apply to distinct offences while S. 235 does not apply to offences which are not distinct offences—The decision does not negative the proposition that if one of the offences involved in a transaction is doubtful a charge can be framed in respect of it under S. 236.]]

2a. Clauses of Section 239, if mutually exclusive.—A and B commit an offence and are liable to be tried jointly under clause (a) of this section. A and C commit different offences in the course of the same transaction. They can be jointly tried for such offences under clause (d). But A, B and C cannot be jointly tried at the same trial by combining clauses (a) and (d). In this sense the clauses of this section are mutually exclusive. But they are not mutually exclusive in the sense that more than one clause may apply at the same time to a case. Thus, where A is accused of an offence and B of the abetment thereof, the case comes under clause (b), but if the offence and the abetment form parts of the same transaction, the case will also fall under clause (d).¹

Notes 2a–3.

3. “May be tried together.”—Before the amendment of 1923, the section contained the words “as it thinks fit,” and it was held that it was in the discretion of the Court to adopt, in each case, whichever course it regarded as most conducive to the ends of justice.¹ The omission of the said words in the present section does not, however, make any difference and the words “may be tried together” show that it is still in the discretion of the Court to adopt whichever course it thinks best.² The manner in which this discretion should be exercised depends on the facts of each case.³ Wherever the applicability of the section is doubtful, it is far better that it should not be applied than that it should.⁴ Nor should joinder of charges be resorted to when there is a risk of embarrassing the defence by such joinder.⁵ Where four dacoities were committed at four different places within two years and the accused, fourteen in number, were alleged to have taken part in one or more of them, it was held that it would have been more proper to try them separately for the dacoities in which they took part rather than try them jointly for an offence under S. 400, Penal Code.⁶

An exercise of discretion under the section, even if improper, will not be interfered with, unless it has occasioned a failure of justice.⁷

4. "Accused of the same offence" — Clause (a). — The word "offence" has been defined in S. 4 (1) (o) as meaning "any act or omission made punishable by any law for the time being in force." The words "same offence" would, therefore, signify one and the same physical act of crime and not different acts constituting crimes called by the same name or punishable under the same section.¹ Thus, several persons being together in possession of the same stolen property² or several persons together subscribing their names to a false written statement³ commit the same offence. certain persons, it was held that they committed a single riot and not a number of separate riots.⁵

The term 'offence' under this section has been held to include minor and alternative offences.⁶ See also Note 2.

In the undermentioned case,⁷ when A made a false charge against X of stealing goats, and next day B made a false charge against X of stealing the same goats, it was held that A and B committed the same offence. It is submitted that this is not correct. A and B cannot be said to have committed the same act of crime though they may be said to have committed similar acts forming part of the same transaction. The same observations will apply to the case cited below.⁸

Where a single offence has been committed and the allegation of the prosecution is that either A or B committed the crime, it cannot be said that A and B committed the same offence. They cannot, therefore, be tried together at one trial under this section.⁹ So also where A is charged with committing murder by stabbing X while B is charged in the alternative with abetting A in stabbing X and with stabbing X himself, A and B should be tried separately.¹⁰

5. Abetment and attempt — Clause (b). — Under clause (b), persons accused of an offence and persons accused of abetment¹ or of an attempt to commit such offence,² may be jointly tried. The trial of offenders and their accomplices would therefore come under this clause;³

so also would a trial of two persons, one for attempt to commit an offence and another for abetment of the offence.⁴

5a. Offences of the same kind — Clause (c). — A and B are accused of jointly committing two distinct offences of the same kind but not forming part of the same transaction. Can they be tried together? Under the section as it stood before the amendments of 1923 there was no provision corresponding to clause (c) of the present section and there was a divergence of opinion on the question. According to one set of cases,¹ the words at the end of the section "and the provisions contained in the former part of this chapter shall apply to all such charges" did not refer to Ss. 234 to 238 but only to Ss. 221 to 232, that therefore the word "person" in S. 234 could not be read as including "persons," that neither S. 234 nor S. 239 consequently applied to the case and that therefore they could not be tried together. According to another class of cases,² the words quoted above include also Ss. 234 to 238, that in this view the word "person" in S. 234 must be read as including "persons" and that the joint trial was not bad. Clause (c) now makes it clear that such a trial is permissible.³ For the clause to apply, the offences charged must be of the same kind⁴ and they must have been committed by the accused persons jointly.⁵

Offences under section 41 (h) and (j) of the Factories Act, 1911, are offences of the same kind within the meaning of this section.⁶

6. "Same transaction" — Clauses (a) and (d). — Where A commits offence X, B commits offence Y and C commits offence Z, and X, Y and Z form parts of the same transaction, A, B and C can, at one trial, be tried for the offences of X, Y and Z respectively.¹ There is no limit to the number of offences which can be charged when they come under clause (d) of this section² but they should all form part of one and the same transaction.³ The words "same transaction" have the same meaning as they have in s. 235.⁴ As seen in Note 2 to that section, the test whether the several offences are parts of the same transaction is to see whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose, or as cause and effect, or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action.⁵ Where there is such continuity of purpose or design and continuity of action, the different acts may be regarded as

same Note, proximity of time is not essential to constitute the acts, parts of the same transaction.⁸ Nor is it necessary that the accused should have acted together from start to finish.⁹ On the other hand, the mere fact that several offences of the same kind, such as dacoity, are committed at about a particular time, will not necessarily make them parts of the same transaction.¹⁰

What does or does not form part of the same transaction is a question of fact in each particular case.¹¹

Notes 6-7

In order to say whether several persons can be jointly tried as having committed offences forming parts of the same transaction, the Court has to look to the accusation, i. e., the prosecution case as set forth in the charges themselves, and if according to that case the offences are such as could be regarded as parts of the same transaction, it would be justified in holding a joint trial. It need not consider what the final result of the case would be.¹²

See also Note 2 under S. 235.

7. Acts done in pursuance of conspiracy. — It has been seen in Note 2 to S. 235 that where there is a conspiracy having a definite object in view, and several offences are committed in pursuance of such conspiracy, the several offences will generally form parts of the same transaction. This principle will also apply where the several offences are committed by different persons.¹ In Babulal Chaukhan

v. Emperor,² the Privy Council observed as follows :

"If several persons conspire to commit offences, and commit overt acts in pursuance of the conspiracy (a circumstance which makes the act of one the act of each and all the conspirators) these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction, which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it. The common concert and agreement which constitute the conspiracy, serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of it."

The offence of conspiracy and acts done in pursuance of the conspiracy form one and the same transaction.³ The transaction continues so long as the conspiracy continues.⁴ But separate acts of crime not committed in pursuance of the conspiracy but being isolated acts committed individually during the continuance of the conspiracy are not parts of the same transaction with the conspiracy itself and acts alleged to be the subject of the conspiracy. In other words, a conspiracy and acts done in furtherance of its common object have no community with separate acts which may be committed by a conspirator for individual gain.⁵

cause hurt to each other in a fight, they cannot be tried together for the offence of causing hurt to each other.⁴ The fighting cannot be considered as a "transaction."⁵ It was, however, held in the under-mentioned case⁶ that, where the object of two opposite parties is to take forcible possession of the same piece of land, they could both be tried together in one trial. It is submitted that this view is not correct. It has also been held in the case cited below⁷ that a mere common purpose, e. g., to drive the complainant out of a house, is not sufficient to make two perfectly distinct offences parts of the same transaction. Where two motor buses coming from opposite directions collided and some persons were injured thereby, it was held that, though the accused, the drivers of the two buses, had no similar or identical purpose in view, the transaction was the same and they both could be tried together.⁸

In the undermentioned case⁹ several persons were charged with being members of an unlawful assembly and having in prosecution of the common object, committed various offences and they were tried jointly. In the course of the trial it was found that the common object was not established. It was held that there was no justification for a joint trial once it was found that the common unlawful object had not been established. It is submitted that the decision is incorrect, as the provisions relating to joinder are intended to deal with the position as it exists at the time of the charge and not with the result of the trial and the propriety of a joint trial depends on the case as set forth in the charges. See Note 6.

12. Continuing offence. — It has been held by Spencer, Offg. C. J., in the undermentioned case¹ that if an offence is a continuing one, such as waging war, it can be regarded as a continuous or same transaction. Reilly, J., in the same case has taken a contrary view, namely, that a continuing offence may or may not be a single transaction. Krishnan, J., to whom the case was referred on difference of opinion between these two Judges has held that the waging of war is really a continuing offence, which begins with the first act of war and goes on till the war is ended, but the various incidents in a war may be so disconnected as to form different transactions, the question whether they form parts of the same transaction or not being one to be judged on the facts of each case.

13. Kidnapping and abduction. — In the undermentioned cases,¹ a joint trial of A for an offence under S. 366 and of B for an offence under S. 368 has been held to be bad, while a contrary view has been taken in the cases cited below.² The question is, however, really one of fact depending upon the facts of the particular case as to whether the two offences could be regarded as parts of the same transaction.

14. Keeping gaming house and using it. — It has been generally held that a person keeping a common gaming house and persons using it could be tried together as the two offences are inter-dependent and form a complement of each other.¹

16. Clause (e). — This clause was newly added in 1923. Before its introduction it was held that the joint trial for theft and receiving the stolen property was illegal unless they formed parts of the same transaction.¹ Now such a joint trial is expressly provided for by this clause.² A receiver from a receiver of stolen property should not be the property at different times. Before the introduction of clause(f), it had been held in several decisions that a joint trial in such cases was illegal.³ Clause (f) was intended to meet such cases and a joint trial would now be permissible.⁴ The phrase, "possession of which has been transferred by one offence," refers to the original theft of stolen property and not to the transfer of possession from the thief to the person receiving stolen property.⁵

The provisions of this clause cannot, however, be extended by analogy to a trial of persons accused of offences other than those specifically mentioned therein. Therefore, the joint trial of the accused both charged under S. 412, Penal Code,⁶ or the joint trial of a person under S. 411, Penal Code, and another who has purchased the same from one of the accused,⁷ is illegal.

18. Clause (g). — In order that persons accused of an offence under chapter XII of the Penal Code relating to counterfeit coin can be tried under this clause with persons accused of any other offence under the same chapter, or of abetment of or attempting to commit any such offence, all the offences must relate to the same coin. So, where two persons are charged, one with uttering a counterfeit coin and the other with being in possession of different counterfeit coins, they cannot be jointly tried together under this clause.¹

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — Where a person is committed to the Court of Session on a number of charges, the Sessions Judge must record some order in respect of them and should not dispose of some of the charges alone without recording any order in regard to the others.¹ Under this section, he can stay the trial on some of the charges or allow them to be withdrawn on conviction being had on another charge.²

It has been held that this section applies only to a case where a person is accused of several distinct offences. Thus, it applies to a case where there are charges of several distinct offences constituted by separate acts or series of acts, like those which fall under ss. 234 and 235, sub-section (1), but not where there are several charges founded on the same act as those which fall under s. 235, sub-sections (2) and (3), and section 236.³

This section applies, again, only to charges framed in the same case and not to separate charges for distinct offences in different cases. Thus, the prosecution cannot, on conviction of the accused in one case, withdraw a charge against him in another case.⁴ Nor can the Court, pending an appeal against the conviction in one case, stay the trial of charges in respect of other cases.⁵ As to withdrawal of charges by the Court, see Notes to S. 227.

2. "Conviction has been had." — The section contemplates a withdrawal or stay of trial of charges only when a conviction has been had on one or more of them. So, where a person is charged with murder under s. 302 of the Penal Code and with causing disappearance of the evidence of murder under s. 201, Penal Code, but before the trial begins in the Court of Session, the Public Prosecutor withdraws the charge for the offence under s. 201, Penal Code, this section has no application to such a case. A trial on the charge under s. 201, Penal Code, could not therefore be proceeded with under this section, when the conviction of the charge under s. 302, Penal Code, is set aside on appeal.¹

3. "On one or more of them." — Where a person is convicted on one or more of the charges against him, it is only before the other charges are tried that they could be withdrawn. But when all the charges have been tried and the accused found guilty, no withdrawal can be made of any charge. In such cases, if the Court considers a certain term of imprisonment adequate to meet the offence under each head, the practice is not to convict on one head and drop the others, but to convict on each head and pass concurrent sentences.¹ See also S. 35 Note 10 and S. 397 Note 3.

4. "With the consent of the Court." — The word "Court" in the section is not restricted merely to the trial Court, but includes every grade of Court including the High Court in revision and in appeal. Thus, when a charge containing more heads than one is framed against the same person and he had been convicted on one or more of them, and the complainant applies in revision praying for infliction of sentence on the others but subsequently withdraws the application, the withdrawal amounts to the withdrawal of the complaint, with regard to such charges, with the consent of the Court.¹ Again, where an accused is charged with an offence under s. 408, Penal Code, in respect of ten receipts, and is tried and convicted in respect of three of them, the High Court's direction in the appeal that no further proceedings be taken in respect of the other receipts amounts to a stay of the trial with regard to those charges within the meaning of this section.²

5. Effect of withdrawal or stay of trial. — A withdrawal of charges¹ or a stay of enquiry or trial thereof² under this section has

1. Scope of the section. — This section which relates to the commencement of the trial of a summons-case may be compared with the corresponding provisions relating to the trial of warrant-cases and sessions trials. In the trial of a summons-case, the particulars of the offence are stated to the accused and his plea is recorded at the very commencement of the trial, whereas in warrant-cases, the trial commences with the taking of the evidence for the prosecution, and the framing of the charge and recording of the accused's plea are postponed till after the prosecution evidence has been recorded. In this respect the commencement of a sessions trial resembles that of a summons-case, rather than that of a warrant-case, because in sessions trial also (S. 271) the charge is read and explained to the accused and his plea is recorded at the very commencement of the trial.

2. "When the accused appears." — As to the right of the accused to appear by pleader, see S. 205 and Notes thereunder.

3. Particulars of the offence. — The section requires that the particulars of the offence charged must be stated to the accused. A general reference to the terms of the marginal note of a section is not sufficient.¹ It is not necessary that the Magistrate should make a record of what he has stated to the accused in explaining the offence.² But there must be some indication in the record to show that the provisions of this section were complied with.³ However, the omission to make a note to the effect that the particulars of the offence were explained to the accused is only an irregularity.⁴ In the undermentioned case,⁵ the accused was sent up by the police on certain allegations. It was held that on such allegations being found not to amount to any offence, it was not open to the Magistrate to proceed against the accused on some other footing which would inculcate him. Where the accused is prosecuted for an offence of which he is not proved to be guilty, he cannot be convicted for another offence without being called upon to show cause why he should not be convicted of such other offence.⁶

4. No formal charge necessary. — Under this section it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to frame a formal charge in a summons-case. It has, however, been held in the undermentioned case¹ that when a prosecution is for an offence under an Act of very recent date, with the provisions of which the litigants as well as the lawyers are not quite familiar, it would be proper for a Magistrate to frame a formal charge.

As to cases where the Magistrate frames a charge in a summons case and the accused is misled into believing that he will be given an opportunity to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, see Notes under section 256.

5. Plea of accused. — In summons-cases the Magistrate must record the accused's plea at the commencement of the trial.¹ See S. 243.

6. Joinder of charges. — Though this section provides that in summons-cases it is not necessary to frame a formal charge, the provisions of the Code relating to the joinder of charges and the joint trial of accused persons apply to the trial of summons cases also.¹

Note 8

8. Effect of non-compliance with the section. — Does the omission to state the particulars of the offence to the accused as required by this section amount to an illegality or to a mere irregularity curable under S. 537? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court¹ that such an omission is an illegality and not a mere irregularity covered by S. 537. On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras² and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur³ that such an omission is only an irregularity which under S. 537 does not vitiate the trial unless it has occasioned a failure of justice. In the undermentioned Patna case,⁴ the view of the Calcutta High Court was adopted but a more recent case⁵ of the Patna High Court has followed the opposite view.

1. Legislative changes.—The word “may” has been substituted for the word “shall” by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923, thereby restoring the language of the Codes of 1872 and 1861.

2. Conviction on admission of truth of accusation.—This section empowers a Magistrate to convict an accused person when he admits that he has committed the offence of which he is accused and does not show any sufficient cause why he should not be convicted.¹ But a mere admission of the truth of all or any of the facts alleged against him does not amount to an admission of guilt unless such facts constitute an offence in the eye of the law; and in case such facts do not constitute an offence the accused cannot be convicted on such an admission.² Further, the admission referred to in the section is the admission made before the trying Magistrate by an accused in pursuance of the questions put to him under S. 242. Therefore, where there has been no plea of “guilty” before the trying Magistrate, he cannot rely upon an admission alleged to have been made by the accused in some other case and at some other time.³

Under the Code as it stood prior to the amendments of 1923, a Magistrate was bound to convict an accused person if he pleaded guilty.⁴ The section in its present form, however, leaves it to the discretion of the Magistrate whether to accept the accused's plea of guilty or not. If he exercises his discretion by not accepting the plea of guilty and proceeds to hear the evidence, he must satisfy himself that the evidence justifies a conviction. If the evidence does not prove the charge, he is bound to acquit the accused. It is not open to him to go back to the plea of guilty and convict the accused on that plea.⁵ Nor is it open to him to take from the accused a further plea of guilty and relieve himself of the duty of examining the remaining witnesses cited on behalf of the prosecution.⁶

A Magistrate may call for evidence even after he has accepted the plea of guilty made by the accused, with the object of acquainting himself with the facts of the case in order to pass an adequate sentence.⁷ A plea of "guilty" can be allowed to be withdrawn if the accused was, at the time of making it, enfeebled by illness and undefended.⁸

3. Admission by pleader. — See Section 205 Note 7.

4. Record of admission. — This section requires that an admission of an accused should be recorded as nearly as possible in the words used by him.¹ Further, an admission should be recorded immediately it is made and not afterwards from rough notes or memory.²

5. One admission for several accused. — The law requires that each accused should be questioned separately and that the answers given should be taken as nearly as possible in the words used by each accused. Therefore, where a Magistrate records one admission for a number of accused persons, the admission is bad.¹

1. Legislative changes.

Changes made by Act XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) The words "If the Magistrate does not convict the accused under the preceding section or" which have been added at the commencement of sub-s.(1), are in keeping with the amendment of S. 243 whereby the Magistrate is no longer obliged to convict on a plea of guilty but may, notwithstanding such plea, record evidence before convicting the accused.
- (2) The proviso to sub-s.(1) is new and provides for a case where a complaint is made by a Court.
- (3) In sub-s.(2) for the words "issue process to compel the attendance of any witness or the production of," the words "issue a summons to any witness directing him to attend or to produce" have been substituted.¹

2. "Shall proceed to hear the complainant." — When an accused person denies the truth of the complaint made against him, the Magistrate ought to hear the complainant and his witnesses in support of the prosecution, and also the accused and his witnesses.¹ He is bound to hear the complainant and take all evidence that he produces in support of the prosecution before he can acquit the accused.² An order of acquittal passed without this being done is illegal,³ and the High Court may set it aside in revision.⁴

The accused cannot be convicted except upon the evidence that he did commit the offence; the latter part of S. 243 must not be read as distinct and separable from the first part.⁵ A conviction is illegal which is arrived at without the recording of the prosecution evidence.⁶ Similarly, where the accused was convicted upon a statement of the complainant not made on oath before a Magistrate, the conviction was held to be illegal.⁷

This section does not make the examination of the complainant himself absolutely necessary, so as to vitiate a conviction if such examination does not take place.⁸ But when a complainant's evidence is taken it should be in the presence of the accused. The common practice of not examining the complainant at the trial but only under S. 200 of the Code is contrary to law.⁹

A Magistrate while enquiring into the complaint cannot, in the same case, convict the complainant himself because the evidence discloses that he too was a party to an affray. If the complainant is to be convicted it can only be in separate proceedings taken against him.¹⁰

Criminal Courts have no authority to order the accused to pay the complainant costs of an adjournment on the failure of the accused to appear on the day fixed for hearing of the complaint.¹¹

3. Evidence in support of the prosecution. — The language of the section is compulsory and the Magistrate is bound to take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution.¹ Even when the complainant declines to be examined, it is the duty of the Magistrate to proceed to take the evidence of his other witnesses before dismissing the complaint, although in any event a strong preliminary presumption against the truth of the complainant's case would arise from his contumacious refusal to be examined.² In summons-cases, the parties have an undoubted right to examine their witnesses and their right could only be curtailed by the Court upon the ground that the examination of these witnesses will delay and possibly defeat the ends of justice.³ But where a complainant after examining some of the witnesses named by him, did not apply to the Magistrate to issue summons to other witnesses, it was held that the Magistrate was not wrong in deciding the case on evidence before him.⁴ A Magistrate has no jurisdiction to refuse to examine a witness who is deaf but who is able to speak and write. Such refusal is materially prejudicial and vitiates the trial.⁵

A Magistrate should always be chary of taking upon himself the duty of deciding on behalf of the parties which witnesses should be examined.⁶ Generally it is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, and as a rule, the Court should leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as provided for in S. 138 of the Evidence Act. Section 495, sub-s.(9) also tends in the same direction.⁷

It is no doubt ordinarily the duty of the prosecution if they rely on documents, to tender them in evidence together with such formal proof as may be necessary. But where documents actually on the file of the proceedings are not formally exhibited and put on record as evidence, the Magistrate should in the exercise of a wise discretion, before the close of the prosecution case, draw the attention of the prosecution to the fact that the documents have not been exhibited, or ascertain whether they are to be regarded as having been produced as evidence for the prosecution under S. 214.⁸

But a Magistrate cannot after the trial is closed and while writing judgment, admit in evidence a document without giving the accused an opportunity of raising objection to its relevancy and admissibility.⁹

The closing of the case for the prosecution is no mere form, but, with certain exceptions, closes the door to any further evidence against the accused. The prosecution cannot re-open the case and make additions to it except such voluntary addition as the accused can himself make.¹⁰ A statement by a party that he has closed his case, should bear the signature of the party. In the absence of such signature, it is not recorded in accordance with law and there is no presumption of its correctness.¹¹

Statements made by a defence witness against accused persons other than the one who called him as a witness cannot be considered as if it were evidence led on behalf of the complainant.¹² of the accused person, he is not competent to take a further plea of guilty from the accused and relieve himself of the duty of examining other prosecution witnesses.¹³

In connected cases it is not proper to take the depositions in one case and have them copied and used in the other.¹⁴

4. Duty of prosecution. — The duty of the prosecution is to prove all the relevant facts essential to establish the guilt of the accused.¹ Irrelevant evidence should be excluded and the prosecution must be confined to simple and true evidence and no attempt should be made to hide essential facts or to embroider the case.²

The prosecution cannot be permitted at the last moment to change its ground.³ See also S. 286 Note 18.

5. Cross-examination. — The section does not contain any express provision for cross-examination, but a cross-examination must certainly be allowed at some stage and hence the right is exercisable under this section.¹ In the procedure laid down for the trial of summons cases the accused has no right to postpone the cross-examination of any prosecution witnesses as in the trial of warrant cases. But if the cross-examination is postponed in accordance with the direction of the Magistrate, he is bound to give the accused a further opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses. Without such examination the evidence will not be legally admissible and the irregularity will vitiate the trial.²

6. Extra-judicial information. — It is extremely improper for a Magistrate in disposing of a case to rely in any way on statements made to him out of Court.¹

7. Evidence of the accused. — The evidence of the accused should be taken after that of the complainant.¹ But where no prejudice was caused, it was held that the fact of a Deputy Magistrate having recorded some evidence of the defence before the close of the case for the prosecution, would be no ground for reversing his decision.²

The section makes it obligatory on the Magistrate to hear the accused and record the evidence which he adduces in his defence after the prosecution evidence is recorded.³ When the section says that the Magistrate shall hear the accused, it certainly means that he should ask the accused what he has to say in his own defence against the charge which has been brought against him, and in explanation of the evidence which has been led to support the charge.⁴ But the examination need not be recorded with the same formality as in warrant-cases or preliminary enquiries.⁵ As to the applicability of S. 342 to summons-cases, see Note 3 to S. 342.

No Criminal Court can shut its eyes to the statement of an accused person when that statement refers to certain documents to which the accused is a party. The Court may not be satisfied with the statement or may require further proof but it cannot brush aside the documents to which the accused are parties when the accused themselves file those documents in Court along with their statements. As the accused cannot be examined on oath, they can only file a statement or refer to some documents to which they have been parties.⁶

Where, after closing hours, the Magistrate insisted on going on with the case and the accused's counsel wanted an adjournment to examine the witnesses who were in attendance and the adjournment was refused, one ground being that no defence list had been filed, it was held that the ground for refusal was wrong and the convictions were set aside.⁷

It is the duty of Magistrates when dealing with ignorant individuals accused of technical offences to go very thoroughly into the evidence, and where they are not defended by advocates, to give them some assistance in putting up obvious defensive pleas.⁸

As to the effect of refusal by a Magistrate to examine a witness, on the conviction of the accused, see S. 537 Note 27.

8. "May issue summons . . ." — Under the Code of 1861, S. 263, it was in the discretion of the Magistrate to summon the witnesses "if he considered the evidence essential to the just decision of the case," and incumbent on him to summon them only if it appeared to him that they were likely to give material evidence and that they would not voluntarily appear for the purpose of being examined.¹

Under the present section also, the Magistrate is under no obligation to issue process to compel the attendance of any witness either on the application of the complainant or the accused. He has a discretion in the matter.² However, he must consider the application. He cannot ignore it completely,^{2a} nor can he exercise the discretion to the detriment of the applicant in an arbitrary manner.³ The arbitrary exercise of discretion does not necessarily amount to acting without jurisdiction so as to justify the High Court's interference in all cases; but where the refusal to issue process amounts to a denial of justice, the High Court would interfere.⁴ Thus, when the accused was a police constable and it was not improbable that the witnesses for the prosecution would not voluntarily appear, it was held that it was just such a case in which the Magistrate should have exercised his discretion and issued summons.⁵ Where, on the other hand, no prejudice is caused, the High Court will not interfere with the order of the Magistrate.⁶

Though there is no provision for securing the attendance of witnesses residing in a foreign territory, the Magistrate is bound to make all reasonable efforts to procure their attendance.⁷

Where an accused who was called upon to let in evidence applied for, and obtained the summoning of his witnesses on his behalf, it was held that he had exhausted the power of summoning witnesses for the defence and all that he could do was to move the Magistrate to summon any other witnesses whom he might deem necessary under S. 540.⁸

An application for summoning witnesses cannot be granted by a Magistrate not seised of the case.⁹

9. Re-issue of summons. — It was held by the Calcutta Court in cases decided prior to the amendment of sub-s.(2) that there was no discretionary power given by S. 244 to a Magistrate to refuse to compel the attendance of witnesses upon whom processes had already been issued.¹ This view has also been adopted by the Patna High Court subsequent to the amendment.² But the Madras view is that the change in the new Code by the substitution of the words "may issue summons to any witness" for the words "may issue process to compel the attendance of any witness," renders it no longer obligatory on a Magistrate to compel the attendance of a witness who has received the summons.³

But every endeavour should be made to secure attendance of witnesses who have been summoned,⁴ and a Court should see that its summons and warrants are duly executed.⁵

When a Magistrate is unable to record the evidence of witnesses in attendance on the date fixed and the case is adjourned, the witnesses should be told to appear on the adjourned date; a party should not be required to repeatedly summon his witnesses on payment of fresh process-fees merely because the Magistrate is unable to record their evidence on the date originally fixed.⁶

10. Adjournment for procuring attendance of witnesses. —

The terms of the section apparently suppose that the defence witnesses attend voluntarily and accompany the accused.¹ The law intends that as a general rule the prisoner should have his witnesses present on the day of trial.² If a summons is necessary to procure the attendance of any witness, it should be applied for before the date fixed for hearing. When no such application is made a Magistrate does not exercise his discretion wrongly in refusing an adjournment asked for at the trial.³ On the other hand, however, it is not an irregularity to adjourn a trial for the purpose of enabling accused to procure the attendance of his witnesses.⁴

The section no doubt imposes an obligation on parties of procuring their evidence in summons-cases, but the Court should, before convicting an accused in such a case, take the precaution of ascertaining from the accused whether he has any witnesses, and if he has but they are not present, should consider whether he should not be allowed a further opportunity of bringing or summoning his witnesses through Court; where this was not done, a conviction was set aside.⁵ But a Court is not bound to do this and although the Magistrate may not have exercised a wise discretion in not sending for the defence witnesses, the High Court held in a case that it was unable to say that there was any illegality requiring it to quash the conviction.⁶

1. Legislative changes. — Sub-section (2) has been amended by adding the words "where the Magistrate does not proceed in accordance with the provisions of S. 349 or S. 562": see Note 6.

Similar amendments are effected in Ss. 258 and 306.

2. When to acquit. — A Magistrate is not empowered to record an order of acquittal until he has heard all the prosecution and defence evidence. An order of acquittal passed before the evidence on both sides is over is not in accordance with law and is liable to be set aside.¹ Where a Magistrate refuses to proceed with a complaint on a legal objection raised by the defence, as for instance, the want of sanction of a particular authority, his order is not one of acquittal.²

3. "If he thinks fit." — As to whether these words make the examination of the accused prescribed by S. 342 optional in summons cases, see Note 3 to S. 342.

4. Effect of dismissal of complaint or discharge.—In the trial of a summons-case the law contemplates no other order except an order of acquittal or of conviction. When the Magistrate does not find the accused guilty, he is bound to record an order of acquittal.¹ Therefore, when the Magistrate finds that no case is made out against the accused, he acquits the accused in law, although he may style his order as an order of discharge² or of dismissal of complaint.³ See also Note 3 to S. 247 and Note 4 to S. 241.

5. Trial of warrant-case as summons-case and acquittal—Effect.—It has been held that when a warrant-case is tried as a summons-case and the accused is acquitted under this section, the acquittal amounts only to a discharge under S. 253 and can be dealt with under S. 436.¹

6. Sentence.—When a Court convicts an accused person of any offence, it is bound to pass some sentence, however light it may be, unless it acts under S. 349 or S. 562.¹ It is illegal to adjourn the passing of sentence for an indefinite period.² Section 349 deals with the procedure to be followed when the trying Magistrate cannot pass a sufficiently severe sentence.

Section 562 deals with the power of the Court to release first offenders under 21 years of age on probation of good conduct.

7. Whether Magistrate can find accused guilty while acting under section 349.—See S. 349 and Notes thereunder.

8. Committal to sessions.—As to the legality of committing to sessions offence triable as summons cases, see Note 4 to S. 347.

246.* A Magistrate may, under section 243

Section 246

Finding not limited by or section 245, convict the accused complaint or summons. of any offence triable under this Chapter which from the facts admitted or proved he appears to have committed, whatever may be the nature of the complaint or summons.

1. Scope of the section. — This section is analogous to S. 227 and enables the Magistrate to convict the accused of any offence which, from the facts proved or admitted, he appears to have committed, though it is different in its nature from the offence originally charged. But it is necessary that both the original offence and the offence of which the accused is sought to be convicted are triable as summons-cases.¹ The fact that the offence originally charged was one under a local or special law and that the offence of which the accused is sought to be convicted is under the Penal Code, does not affect the applicability of the section provided that both are triable as summons-cases.²

When convicting an accused person under this section for a different offence from that originally charged, it is not necessary to re-open the trial and to follow again the procedure prescribed by Ss. 243 and 244.³ But this does not mean that a Magistrate can convict an accused person of an offence in respect of which he has had no opportunity of defending himself.⁴ Further, the section refers to the nature of the offence and not to the date on which the offence was committed. Hence, the section does not empower a Magistrate in a summons-case to convict an accused person of an offence alleged to 247.* If the summons has been issued on complaint, and upon the day appointed for the appearance of the accused, or any day subsequent thereto to which the hearing may be adjourned, the complainant does not appear, the Magistrate shall, notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, acquit the accused, unless for some reason he thinks proper to adjourn the hearing of the case to some other day:

Provided that, where the complainant is a public servant and his personal attendance is not required, the Magistrate may dispense with his attendance, and proceed with the case.

was provided that on default of appearance of the complainant on the date of hearing the complaint might be dismissed and that the effect of such a dismissal was the same as an acquittal.² In the later Codes, it was provided that in such circumstances the accused shall be acquitted.

The proviso to the section was added for the first time in the 1893 Code.

2. Scope, object and applicability of the section. — This section provides that if on the day of hearing the complainant does not appear, the accused shall be acquitted unless the Magistrate thinks fit to adjourn the case. The object of the section is to prevent the complainant from being dilatory in the prosecution of the case.¹ The section applies only to summons-cases. In warrant-cases, the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to acquit an accused on the ground of the absence of the complainant.² As to the procedure to be followed in such cases if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing, see S. 259. But where the Magistrate treats a case throughout as a summons-case and follows the procedure prescribed for such cases, he is at liberty to acquit the accused under this section although the complaint mentioned offences triable as warrant-cases.³ As the opening words of the section show, the section does not apply unless the proceedings have been instituted on a complaint.⁴

Inquiries under S. 1 of the Workman's Breach of Contract Act, 1859, are not criminal proceedings and the section does not apply to them.⁵

3. Applicability of section to cases consisting both of offences triable as summons-cases and offences triable as warrant-cases. — As seen in Note 2 to S. 241, where a case consists of two charges, one of which is a summons-case and the other a warrant-case, the procedure prescribed for the trial of the graver offence should be followed and the case ought to be tried as a warrant-case. Hence, in such a case, if the complainant absents himself on the date of hearing, the Magistrate cannot acquit the accused under this section but can only discharge him under section 259.¹

Where, however, a case is begun as a warrant-case but a charge is framed only for an offence triable as a summons-case, it has been held by the Madras High Court that the accused is entitled to acquittal under this section on the complainant's absence on the day of hearing. This view proceeds on the ground that this section confers a substantive right on the accused of which he cannot be deprived merely by reason of the adoption of a particular procedure by the Magistrate.² See also Note 4 to S. 241.

4. "Upon the day adjourned." — The section refers to the absence of the complainant on the date fixed for the appearance of the accused or to which the hearing has been adjourned. If the Magistrate under a mistake takes up the case on a day to which it was not posted and dismisses the complaint, this section does not apply.¹ The section applies though the case has been posted only for arguments, because in such a case the hearing of the case cannot be said to be finished.^{1a} But where the hearing of the case is finished and the case is only posted for judgment, the section does not apply and the accused cannot be acquitted merely because the complainant is absent on such a day.² Similarly, if a case is only nominally fixed for hearing and it cannot be reasonably expected to be reached and is not in fact reached during the day, this section has no application and the accused cannot be acquitted on the ground of the complainant's absence.^{2a} The power of the Court to acquit an accused under this section on the ground of the complainant's absence at the hearing is not affected by the fact that the accused is not present³ or even by the fact that the process.

5. "The complainant does not appear." — The appearance of the complainant must be in person. The presence of the complainant's pleader is not enough to avoid the consequences specified in the section.¹ The complainant must be present when the case is called; it is not enough if he appears afterwards though it may be in the course of the same working day.² But it has been held in the undermentioned decision³ of the Madras High Court that if a case is posted for 11 A. M. on a certain day and the complainant appears at that time but the Court does not sit till 2 P. M. and the complainant does not wait till then, he cannot be said to have failed to appear within the meaning of the section.

Where, on the day to which a case is posted, the case is not taken up at all, the complainant cannot be said to have failed to "appear" within the meaning of the section though he does not attend Court on such date as the time at which appearance is contemplated is when the case is called on for hearing.⁴

It has been held by the Madras High Court that where the date of hearing has not been communicated to the complainant at all, his absence cannot be regarded as a failure to appear for the purposes of this section.⁵

The accused can be acquitted under the section only on the failure of the complainant to appear. His failure to pay process-fees is no ground for acquitting the accused under this section.⁶

In a joint charge for three offences under S. 234, where there are three complainants in respect of the three offences, the absence of one of the complainants can be ground only for acquitting the accused of the offence against the particular complainant who was absent and does not affect the charge as regards the others.⁷

6. Death of complainant.—The maxim actio personalis moritur cum persona (a personal right of action dies with the person) or S. 306 of the Succession Act, 1925, does not apply to criminal prosecutions.¹ Hence the death of a complainant does not ipso facto terminate a criminal prosecution. The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases² is, it is submitted, not correct.

There is a difference of opinion on the question whether this section applies to cases where the absence of the complainant on the day of hearing is due to his death. It has been held by the High Courts of Calcutta,³ Madras⁴ and Lahore⁵ that the section applies while the High Courts of Bombay⁶ and Patna⁷ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur⁸ have doubted whether the section applies. If it be held that the section applies to such cases, it is open to the Magistrate either to acquit the accused⁹ or to adjourn the case to enable another person to continue the prosecution.¹⁰ If it be held that the section does not apply, it is conceived that the Magistrate has no power to acquit the accused but must go on with the case.¹¹

7. "The Magistrate shall . . . some other day." — If the complainant does not appear on the day of hearing, the accused is entitled to be acquitted¹ unless the Magistrate for some reason thinks it proper to adjourn the case.^{1a} The Magistrate has no power to dispense with the appearance of the complainant² or compel him to appear and go on with the case.³ But unless an order of acquittal is actually passed by the Magistrate, the mere absence of the complainant on the day of hearing does not ipso facto result in the acquittal of the accused.⁴ The exercise of discretion in favour of the complainant once by adjourning the hearing does not deprive the Magistrate of the power of acquitting the accused on the non-appearance of the complainant at a subsequent hearing.⁵

The following cases are illustrative of the circumstances under which a Magistrate would be exercising his discretion under the section properly by adjourning the case and giving the complainant a further opportunity instead of acquitting the accused —

- (1) when the complainant is not definitely informed of the place of trial;⁶
- (2) when the complainant is prevented by heavy floods from appearing;⁷
- (3) when the case is transferred from the file of one Magistrate to another without notice to the complainant and he is present in the original Court in ignorance of the transfer.⁸

The following cases show under what circumstances the Magistrate would be exercising his discretion under the section properly if he acquits the accused instead of adjourning the case —

- (1) where the complainant has gone abroad and will not be available for some considerable time;¹⁴
- (2) where the accused is charged for repairing a public road without permission when the repair is admittedly for the public good.¹⁵

The section only contemplates an order of acquittal or of adjournment. An order striking off a case or dismissing a complaint is not within the terms of the section. But such an order if passed in the circumstances mentioned in the section will amount to an order of acquittal.¹⁶

Where a case is adjourned the fact that the Magistrate examined some witnesses on that day does not vitiate the proceedings.¹⁷

1. Legislative changes. — The clause at the end of the section "and shall thereupon acquit the accused" was substituted in the Code of 1882 for the words "a complaint withdrawn under this section shall not again be entertained" which occurred in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872.

2. Scope of the section. — This section provides that under the circumstances specified therein a complaint may be withdrawn with the permission of the Court and that upon such withdrawal the accused must be acquitted. The section, however, applies only to summons-cases. (See Note 6.) An analogous provision is made in S. 494 for the withdrawal of prosecution by the Public Prosecutor with the permission of the Court. That section applies to all offences and is not confined like the present one to summons-cases. Section 345 provides for the compounding of offences. As to differences between withdrawal of complaint under this section and compounding of an offence under S. 345, see Note 3.

Section 537 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923, which authorises the Corporation of Calcutta to withdraw legal proceedings, must be read subject to the provisions of this section and unless the Magistrate is satisfied that there are sufficient grounds for permitting a complaint to be withdrawn, the Corporation cannot withdraw a criminal complaint.¹

3. Withdrawal of complaint and compounding of offences — Difference between.

Section 248:
Notes 3-4.

1. "Compounding" implies the consent of the accused, whereas such consent is not necessary for the withdrawal of a complaint under this section.¹

2. The right to withdraw a complaint under this section applies only to offences triable as summons-cases (see Note 6). But the right to compound an offence under S. 345 applies both to summons as well as to warrant-cases provided they relate to the offence specified in that section.

3. Under this section a complaint can be withdrawn in respect of all offences which are triable as summons-cases. But under S. 345 the right to compound applies only to certain offences specified in that section.

4. In the case of withdrawal of complaint under the section, the permission of the Court is necessary in all cases. But under S. 345 there are several offences which are compoundable without the permission of the Court and such permission is necessary only with reference to certain offences.

5. The withdrawal of a complaint under this section does not by itself result in the acquittal of the accused, unless the Court passes an order acquitting the accused. But the compounding of an offence under S. 345 by itself results in the acquittal of the accused.

See also S. 345 Note 3.

4. "Complaint." — Under this section, a complaint can be withdrawn with the permission of the Court, by a complainant. Thus, where the sanction of a certain public servant is necessary for the criminal proceedings in question and a complaint is filed with the sanction of such public servant, the complaint can be withdrawn by the person filing it and the sanction of the public servant is not necessary for such withdrawal.¹

But, the power to withdraw is confined to the complainant. Thus, where a complaint with reference to an offence under the Municipal law is filed by the Municipal Secretary, the complaint cannot be withdrawn by the Municipal Council.² Moreover, the term "complainant" is used in the restricted sense of a person who files a "complaint" as defined by S. 4 (1) (h). Hence, the term does not apply to a person who sets the police in motion by making a complaint to them. Therefore, where a person makes a complaint to the police and the police make a report to the Magistrate who takes cognizance of the offence on such report, he cannot act under this section and acquit the accused on the application for 'withdrawal' by the person who made the complaint to the police.³

5. "At any time before a final order is passed." — A complaint can be withdrawn under this section at any time¹ before a final order is passed in the case. But this does not mean that a complaint can be withdrawn and the accused can be acquitted, so as to bar a re-trial of the accused under S. 403, even before any process is issued against the accused.²

6. "In any case under this chapter." — This section applies only to offences triable as summons-cases and does not apply to offences triable as warrant-cases. In warrant-cases there is no provision in the Code which provides for the termination of the proceedings on the complainant offering to withdraw his complaint.¹ An offence under

s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act being triable as a summons-case, a complaint of such an offence can be withdrawn under this section.²

7. "Satisfies the Magistrate that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw his complaint."—The withdrawal of a complaint under this section is permissible only if the Magistrate is satisfied that there are "sufficient grounds" for permitting such withdrawal.¹ But where a complaint of offences under ss. 183 and 185 of the Penal Code is made by a Court and such Court subsequently finds that it made a mistake in filing the complaint and wishes to withdraw it, the Magistrate will scarcely be justified in refusing to allow a withdrawal.²

The power to allow a complaint to be withdrawn under this section rests entirely with the Magistrate. The police have no power to entertain an application for withdrawal of a complaint.³

Under this section it is competent to a Magistrate in a proper case to treat an application to the effect that the offence has been compounded as an application for withdrawal of complaint.⁴

8. "Shall thereupon acquit the accused." — Upon the withdrawal of a complaint, the Magistrate has no power to dismiss the case or discharge the accused but must acquit the accused.¹

9. Withdrawal of complaint against one of several accused — Effect. — Where there are several accused persons in a case and the complaint is allowed to be withdrawn as against one of the accused, the withdrawal does not enure to the benefit of the other accused and they are not entitled to acquittal under this section.¹

11. Re-trial of accused, whether barred. — As to whether a fresh trial of an accused acquitted under this section is barred under S. 403, see Notes to that section.

249.* In any case instituted otherwise than upon complaint, a Presidency Magistrate, a Magistrate of the first class, or with the previous sanction of the District Magistrate, any other Magistrate, may for reasons to be recorded by him, stop the proceedings at any stage without pronouncing any judgment either of acquittal or conviction, and may thereupon release the accused.

1. "In any case instituted otherwise than upon a complaint." — This section applies only to cases instituted otherwise than upon a complaint.¹ Further, a Magistrate can proceed under this section only in summons-cases.² If he proceeds under this section in a warrant-case his order will be void and the case will be deemed to continue on the file of the Court.³

2. Revival. — On general principles, the Magistrate who passed an order of stay under this section may, for sufficient reasons, remove the stay and proceed further.¹ But an order stopping further proceedings under this section does not operate as an order of discharge and there is no power under S. 436 to order further inquiry into a case in which such an order has been passed.² At the same time, the order is expressly excluded by the explanation to S. 403 from being an acquittal and hence it does not act as a bar to fresh proceedings against the accused with reference to the same matter.³

250.* (1) If in any case instituted upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, False, frivolous or vexatious accusations.

* Code of 1898, original S. 250.

250. (1) If, in any case instituted by complaint as defined in this Code, or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits the accused and is satisfied that the accusation against him was frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, in his discretion, by his order of discharge or acquittal, direct the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made to pay to the accused, or to each of the accused where there are more than one, such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit:

Provided that, before making any such direction, the Magistrate shall —

(a) record and consider any objection which the complainant or informant may urge against the making of the direction, and

(b) if the Magistrate directs any compensation to be paid, state in writing, in his order of discharge or acquittal, his reasons for awarding the compensation.

(2) Compensation of which a Magistrate has ordered payment under sub-s. (1) shall be recoverable as if it were a fine:

Provided that, if it cannot be recovered, the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term, not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-s. (1) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation to an accused person may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate.

(4) Where an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is a subject to appeal under sub-s. (3) the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal is presented, before the appeal has been decided.

(5) At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter, the Court shall take into account any compensation paid or recovered under this section.

Code of 1882 : S. 250.

250. If, in any case instituted upon complaint, a Magistrate acquits the accused under S. 245 or S. 247, and is of opinion that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious, he may, in his discretion, by his order of acquittal, direct the complainant to pay to the accused, or to each of the accused where there are more than one, such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as the Magistrate thinks fit.

The sum so awarded shall be recoverable as if it were a fine: provided that, if it cannot be realized, the imprisonment to be awarded shall be simple, and for such term, not exceeding thirty days, as the Magistrate directs. At the time of awarding compensation in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter the Court shall take into account any sum paid or recovered as compensation under this section.

Code of 1872 : S. 209.

209. A Magistrate may dismiss the complaint as frivolous or vexatious, and may, in his discretion, by his order of dismissal, award that the complainant shall pay to the accused person such compensation, not exceeding fifty rupees, as to such Magistrate seems just and reasonable.

In such cases, if more persons than one are accused in the complaint, the Magistrate may, in like manner, award compensation not exceeding fifty rupees to each of them.

one or more persons is or are accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate, and the Magistrate by whom the case is heard discharges or acquits all or any of the accused, and is of opinion that the accusation against them or any of them was false and either frivolous or vexatious, the Magistrate may, by his order of discharge or acquittal, if the person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made is present, call upon him forthwith to show cause why he should not pay compensation to such accused or to each or any of such accused when there are more than one, or, if such person is not present direct the issue of a summons to him to appear and show cause as aforesaid.

(2) The Magistrate shall record and consider any cause which such complainant or informant may show and if he is satisfied that the accusation was false and either frivolous or vexatious may, for reasons to be recorded, direct that compensation to such amount not exceeding one hundred rupees or, if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees, as he may determine, be paid by such complainant or informant to the accused or to each or any of them.

(2A) The Magistrate may, by the order directing payment of the compensation under sub-section (2), further order that, in default of payment, the person ordered to pay such compensation shall suffer simple imprisonment for a period not exceeding thirty days.

The sum so awarded shall be recoverable by distress and sale of the moveable property belonging to the complainant which may be found within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District ; and such order shall authorize the distress and sale of any moveable property belonging to the complainant without the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District, when the order has been endorsed by the Magistrate of the District in which such property is situated, and, if the sum awarded cannot be realized by means of such distress, by imprisonment of the complainant in the civil jail, for any time not exceeding thirty days, unless such sum is sooner paid.

Code of 1861 : S. 270.

270. In any case where the Magistrate shall dismiss the complaint as frivolous and vexatious, it shall be lawful for him in his discretion, by his order of dismissal, to award that the complainant shall pay to the accused person such amends, not exceeding fifty rupees, as to such Magistrate shall seem just and reasonable. The sum so awarded shall be recoverable by distress and sale of the moveable property belonging to the complainant, which may be found within the jurisdiction of the Magistrate of the District and in default of such distress by imprisonment in the civil jail, for any time not exceeding thirty days unless such amends shall be sooner paid.

(2B) When any person is imprisoned under sub-section (2A), the provisions of sections 68 and 69 of the Indian Penal Code shall, so far as may be, apply.

(2C) No person who has been directed to pay compensation under this section shall, by reason of such order, be exempted from any civil or criminal liability in respect of the complaint made or information given by him :

Provided that any amount paid to an accused person under this section shall be taken into account in awarding compensation to such person in any subsequent civil suit relating to the same matter.

(3) A complainant or informant who has been ordered under sub-section (2) by a Magistrate of the second or third class to pay compensation or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees may appeal from the order, in so far as the order relates to the payment of the compensation, as if such complainant or informant had been convicted on a trial held by such Magistrate.

(4) When an order for payment of compensation to an accused person is made in a case which is subject to appeal under sub-section (3), the compensation shall not be paid to him before the period allowed for the presentation of the appeal has elapsed, or, if an appeal is presented, before the appeal has been decided and, where such order is made in a case which is not so subject to appeal, the compensation shall not be paid before the expiration of one month from the date of the order.

Sub-sections (1) to (2C) were substituted for the original sub-sections (1) and (2) by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923.

1. Legislative changes.

Changes made in 1869 —

- (1) Under S. 270 of the Code of 1861, the compensation awarded could not exceed rupees fifty, whether there were one accused person or more.¹ Act VIII of 1869 amended the section and made rupees fifty awardable as compensation for each of the accused where there were more than one.²
- (2) The words “false and frivolous” were changed into “false or frivolous.”³

Changes made in 1872 —

The second part of S. 270 of the 1861 Code relating to the mode of recovery of compensation was omitted in S. 209 of the Code of 1872, provision having been made therefor in S. 307 of the latter Code.

Changes made in 1882 —

- (1) For the words “dismiss the complaint as frivolous or vexatious” and “by his order of dismissal,” the words “acquits the accused under S. 245 or S. 247” and “is of opinion that the complaint was frivolous or vexatious” and “by his order of acquittal” were substituted.
- (2) The provisions as to recovery of the sum awarded, as if it were a fine and imprisonment if the same is not realised were re-introduced as paragraph 2.
- (3) Paragraph 3 was added.

Changes made in 1891 —

Act IV of 1891 repealed S. 250 of the Code of 1882 and in its place substituted S.560 at the end of that Code. The chief changes made were in sub-section (1) —

- (1) After the word 'complaint' the words "or upon information given to, a police-officer or to a Magistrate, a person is accused before a Magistrate of any offence triable by a Magistrate" were added.
- (2) After the word "Magistrate" the words "by whom the case is heard" were added.
- (3) For the words "acquits, etc.," the words "discharges or acquits" were substituted.
- (4) The provisos as to the recording and considering the objections of the complainant and the recording of reasons for the orders were added.
- (5) Paragraphs 3 and 4 regarding appeals were added.

Changes made in 1898 —

There was no change in the Code of 1898.

Changes made by Act XVIII of 1923 —

- (1) In sub-sections (1) and (2) :
 - (a) For the words "frivolous or vexatious," the words "false and either frivolous or vexatious" were substituted.
 - (b) The words beginning with "if the person upon whose complaint" to the end of sub-section (1) were new.
 - (c) The words "fifty rupees" were replaced by the words "one hundred rupees or if the Magistrate is a Magistrate of the third class, not exceeding fifty rupees."
- (2) The proviso to old sub-s. (2) was incorporated in the newly added sub-section (2A) and the old sub-section (2) was omitted.
- (3) Sub-section (2B) is new.
- (4) Sub-section (2C) is new. The proviso is the same as sub-s. (5) (now repealed) of the Code of 1898.
- (5) In sub-s. (3) for the word and figure "sub-s. (1)" the word and figure "sub-s. (2)" were substituted and after the words "pay compensation" the words "or has been so ordered by any other Magistrate to pay compensation exceeding fifty rupees" were added.
- (6) In sub-section (4) the last sentence is new.

2. Object and applicability of the section. — The object of the section is twofold, firstly, to award by a summary order some compensation to the person against whom a frivolous or vexatious accusation is brought, leaving it to him to obtain further redress against the complainant, if he seeks for it by a regular civil suit or criminal prosecution,¹ and secondly, to deter persons from making vexatious and frivolous complaints.^{1a} The powers, however, should

Under the Code as it stood before it was amended in 1891, it was held that this section applied only to summons-cases and not to warrant-cases.² For the changes introduced in 1891, see Note 1. The present section is applicable to any case.³ It is applicable also to cases triable summarily whether tried summarily or not.⁴

3. "Upon complaint or upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate." — Before the year 1891 the corresponding section of the old Code applied only where a case was instituted upon a complaint and not to cases instituted on any information.¹ After the amendment of that section in 1891 and also under the present section a case instituted "upon information given to a police-officer or to a Magistrate" is within the section.²

Section 250.
Note 3

As has been seen already in section 4 (1) (h), a police-report is not a complaint and compensation cannot be awarded in a case instituted on such report.³ The words "information given to a police-officer" mean information given and entered in the register of cognizable cases under S. 154 of the Code,⁴ and the words "information given to a Magistrate" refer to such information as falls within S. 190 (1), clause (c) of the Code.^{4a} A statement by a person to a police-officer in the course of a police enquiry is not an "information" given to him and a case instituted on the basis of such statement is not within the section.⁵ But where a person points out two persons to the police as those who assaulted him and the police treats this as first information, the case is one that falls under this section.⁶

The report of a Civil Court Amin to the Civil Court that he has been obstructed in the execution of the process entrusted to him is neither a complaint nor information to a police-officer or to a Magistrate, and where the Civil Court directs a prosecution on the basis of such report, the Amin cannot be ordered to pay compensation under this section.⁷ Similarly, where A tells B and B tells C and C tells the police, A cannot be said to give any information to the police and no order can be made against him under this section.⁸ The High Court of Allahabad has, however, held in the undermentioned case⁹ that where A tells B about C with a view to securing the punishment of C and B informs the Magistrate, A can be ordered to pay compensation. It is submitted that this view is not correct. Where, however, the information is given by A to a person whose duty it is to report the same to the police or the Magistrate (as in cases coming under S. 45 of the Code), the latter only acts as a channel for conveying the information given by A who can therefore be ordered to pay compensation.¹⁰

4. "Accused of an offence." — The section by its terms applies only where in pursuance of a complaint or information a person is accused before a Magistrate of an offence. It does not, therefore, apply to the following cases where there is no accusation of any 'offence' as defined in S. 4 (1) (o) of the Code:—

5. Complaint under S. 41 of the Bombay District Police Act.⁶

The section applies to a complaint under S. 20 of the Cattle Trespass Act, as it has specifically been introduced in the Code of 1898 as an offence under the Code. Therefore the undermentioned rulings,⁷ holding that compensation could not be awarded in such cases, are no longer law.

It was held in a decision under the Code of 1861 that the provisions of this section were inapplicable to a complaint under a special law⁸ and in another that it would be applicable.⁹ Under the present section it is applicable to a case of "any" offence, as for example, under the Railways Act, XVIII of 1854.¹⁰

5. "Triable by a Magistrate." — The offence must be one which is triable by a Magistrate,¹ that is, one which is shown as triable by a Magistrate in column 8 of Sch. II.² Thus, the section does not apply to cases where the offence is triable exclusively by the Court of Session but is enquired into by the Magistrate under Chapter XVIII of the Code³ or is even tried by him under the special powers under S. 30

of the Code.⁴

Where a complaint is made of offences some of which are triable by the Magistrate and some by the Sessions Court, and the accused is discharged in respect of all the offences, an order for compensation can be passed under this section only in respect of the offences triable by the Magistrate⁵ and not in respect of the other offences also.⁶

In filing a complaint, the complainant must, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to make an accusation which includes not merely the offence charged therein but also any offence which the facts in the complaint disclose in the light of any enquiry or trial. The mere fact that the complaint charges the accused with an offence which is not triable by a Magistrate does not oust the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to pass an order under this section, if after enquiry the Magistrate finds that the accusation is really one in respect of an offence triable by him.⁷ But it is not incumbent upon a Magistrate to find whether a case is triable by a Court of Session or by himself and if he tries an accused for an offence prima facie triable by him, an order under this section is not illegal even if really the facts prove the offence to be one triable by a Court of Session.^{7a} The question, therefore, whether an offence is triable by a Magistrate is not to be decided solely by the complaint. The proper criterion is the form of the proceeding, i. e., whether they were conducted under Chapter XVIII or Chapter XXI.⁸

Where a particular Magistrate, however, has no power to try a case even though it is triable by a Magistrate, he cannot award compensation as he has not the power to try the case itself.⁹

6. Magistrate by whom the case is heard. — It is only the Magistrate by whom the "case is heard" that can pass an order under this section.¹ It is not the intention of the Legislature that one Magistrate should deal with the case and call upon the complainant to show cause and that another Magistrate should pass an order for compensation.² Thus, an Appellate Court³ cannot, when reversing a conviction, act under this section. Even a High Court cannot in revision pass an order for compensation, although it is of opinion that such an order should be made.⁴ See also Note 99 to S. 423.

The words "the Magistrate by whom the case is heard" do not, however, mean that the evidence must have been heard by him but mean "the Magistrate by whom the case is decided." So, where part of the evidence is heard by one Magistrate and the rest of the evidence is heard and the case is decided by another, the latter is competent to order compensation under this section.⁵ A Magistrate by whom a case is "heard" need not be the one before whom it was instituted.⁶

7. "Discharges or acquits." — Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, compensation could be awarded only where the complaint was dismissed as being frivolous or vexatious. There was a divergence of opinions as to whether it could be awarded in cases of acquittal.¹

The Code of 1882 provided for the award of compensation only in cases where the accused was acquitted under S. 245 or S. 247.² An acquittal by reason of withdrawal of the complaint was not within the section.³

After the amendment in 1891 (see Note 1) the Magistrate can act under this section when he either discharges or acquits an accused person.⁴ The acquittal may be either one under S. 245 or S. 247 or may be one passed on the withdrawal of the complaint. But the acquittal must be one made by the Magistrate himself. The composition of an offence under S. 345 has by itself the effect of an acquittal but there is no order by the Magistrate himself recording an acquittal. The section is not applicable to such cases and no compensation can be awarded.⁵

Where the accused is neither discharged nor acquitted, this section does not apply and no compensation can be awarded to him.⁶

Thus, where a complaint is dismissed under S. 203, there is neither a discharge nor an acquittal of the accused as no process is at all issued to the accused; consequently no compensation can be awarded under this section.⁷

This section speaks of 'the case' as a whole and contemplates a trial or inquiry ending in an unqualified acquittal or discharge of the accused and the policy of the Legislature is to limit the jurisdiction of the Magistrate under this section to simple cases in which the complainant is found to be wholly in the wrong and the accused is discharged or acquitted altogether. So, where an accused is charged with two offences and convicted under one and acquitted under another, this section will not apply.⁸

8. False and either frivolous or vexatious. — Before the amendment of 1923, an order under this section could be passed if the case was either frivolous or vexatious.¹ It was not necessary that the charge should be false as well. But it was held in some cases that neither of the two words excluded the element of falsehood in the charge and that a charge which is false must also be vexatious and is not outside the scope of the section.^{1a}

As qualifying an accusation the term "frivolous" indicates that the accusation is of a trivial nature⁵ or is 'trifling,' 'silly' or 'without due foundation.'⁶ The term vexatious implies that the accusation is one that ought not to have been made and is intended to 'harass'⁷ or 'annoy'⁸ the accused. But where the complainant's case is not an improbable one¹¹ and he is merely unable to prove his case,^{11a} or there is nothing to show that it is wilfully false or that there is any perversion or exaggeration of evidence,¹² it is not proper to hold the complaint false and vexatious. Similarly, the fact that the complainant and the accused are on bad terms is not a sufficient ground for holding that the complaint is a false one.¹³

9. "By his order." — Before the amendment of 1923, the order to pay compensation was part of the order of discharge or acquittal, that is to say, the order of discharge or acquittal and the order directing compensation had to be made simultaneously. An order for compensation made after such discharge or acquittal, in a separate proceeding, was held to be illegal.¹ This is no longer law as after the amendment

it is not necessary that the order for compensation should be embodied in the order of discharge. The two orders are made in separate proceedings. It is only the order calling upon the complainant to show cause which is to be contained in the order of discharge or acquittal.^{1a} The actual order for compensation is necessarily a subsequent order.² But, where the order of compensation is made along with the order of discharge or acquittal, the provision of law is complied with if the order calling upon the complainant to show cause is also made simultaneously with the order of discharge.³ The order calling upon the complainant to show cause cannot either precede⁴ or be made after⁵ the order of discharge or acquittal. Although, the order to show cause is not made part of the judgment of discharge or acquittal, if it is passed and signed immediately after the judgment, so that the order can be said to be a continuation of the original proceeding, or part of it, it is not illegal.⁶ reasons to be recorded is to afford an opportunity to an appellate or revising tribunal to consider the sufficiency of the reasons.³ The mere statement in the order that "in his opinion, the evidence is highly unsatisfactory,"⁴ or that he "finds nothing in the explanation to justify that the complaint was not false and either frivolous or vexatious,"⁵ or "that no case is made out against the accused and some of the accused were added vexatiously,"⁶ is not a good reason for making an order under this section. The reasons must be in addition to and apart from the finding of the Magistrate that the accusation was either frivolous or vexatious,⁷ such as that the object of the complainant was to harass the accused.⁸ But it has been held in some decisions⁹ that the Magistrate is only bound to give reasons for ordering compensation and not for his finding that the accusation is false and frivolous or vexatious.

13. Amount and nature of compensation. — The compensation awarded to each accused should not exceed one hundred rupees. The section does not mean that if there are a number of accused, the total amount awarded to all must not exceed one hundred rupees.¹

Money ordered to be paid as compensation under this section is not a *fine*² though it is made recoverable under S. 547 as if it were a fine.³ The sum awarded as compensation is by way of amends or

Section 250
Notes 13-14

The section should not be used as a punitive measure and in awarding compensation the Magistrate should be strictly guided by the loss or inconvenience which the accused has sustained.⁵ Any misconduct of the accused may also disentitle him to any compensation.⁶

The powers under this section are to be exercised only in fit and proper cases and not indiscriminately in every case in which the accused is discharged.⁷

14. Who can be ordered to pay compensation.—Compensation under this section can only be awarded against a person upon whose complaint or information the accusation was made, and not against a person who did not institute the proceedings but was only examined as a witness.¹ Where a judicial officer makes a complaint under S. 476 acting in his judicial capacity, it is not to be lightly presumed that his conduct is vexatious or frivolous and no compensation should be awarded against him under this section.^{1a}

Public officers are not exempted from liability under this section when they make a complaint.² A police-officer making a report in a non-cognizable case must be taken to be only making a complaint and is not exempt from liability under the section.³

The word 'person' includes also a 'juristic person' like a corporation. So a municipal committee may be ordered to pay compensation under this section.⁴ An obiter dictum has been expressed in the undermentioned case⁵ to the effect that there is nothing in the section to make it non-applicable to the case of even the Crown.

The question whether a servant is responsible under this section for an information lodged on behalf of his master is one of fact and depends on the question whether the servant is merely the mouth-piece of the master or whether he also joins the master in the accusation. In the latter case he is liable.⁶

A guardian or next friend of a minor complainant⁷ or a person who only instigates the giving of false information but who does not himself make the complaint or give the information⁸ cannot be ordered to pay compensation.

15. To whom compensation can be awarded.—A complaint may be well-founded as regards some of the accused and yet vexatious and frivolous as regards others. So, where a Magistrate discharges one of the accused, and convicts the other accused, he can award compensation to the accused who is discharged.¹

16. Imprisonment in default of compensation—Sub-sections (2A) and (2B).—Before the amendment in 1923, a Magistrate had no power to order imprisonment in default of payment of compensation alternatively in the order for payment of compensation itself. He could order imprisonment only after the failure to recover the compensation.¹ But now such an order can be made in the order itself.

The Magistrate has no power to order that the sentence of imprisonment in default shall take effect after a term of civil detention which the complainant was undergoing at the time.² The term of thirty days' imprisonment can be imposed in respect of each of several accused in whose favour payment of compensation has been ordered though the aggregate term of imprisonment exceeds thirty days.³ Where a portion of the compensation is recovered, the person ordered to pay compensation is liable to imprisonment only for a proportionate part of the period of one month mentioned in this section.⁴ [Sub-s.(2B).]

17. No exemption from civil or criminal liability — Sub-section (2C). — The compensation awarded under this section does not deprive the person compensated, of his right to further redress, either by a regular civil suit or a criminal prosecution against the person ordered to pay compensation under this section.¹

An order for payment of compensation does not debar the Magistrate from directing the prosecution of the complainant under S. 476 for an offence under S. 211 of the Penal Code.² Nor does the starting of the prosecution of the complainant bar an order for compensation under the section.³ The question whether a Magistrate is to act under this section, or prosecute the complainant under S. 211, Penal Code, or to do both, is in the discretion of the Magistrate himself and depends upon the facts of each particular case. If prosecution is necessary on grounds of public policy, it would be a wrong exercise of his discretion, if he were to act under this section instead of instituting a prosecution. If prosecution, on the other hand, is unnecessary on grounds of public policy, an order under this section, instead of a prosecution will not be wrong.⁴ The fact that the Magistrate did not desire to act under this section cannot also preclude him from directing the prosecution of the complainant.⁵

The compensation awarded, will of course, be considered in passing sentence in the event of a conviction as the result of the prosecution.⁶

18. Abatement. — Where the accused to whom compensation has been ordered, dies just after the complainant has filed his revision in the High Court, no order can be passed on the petition as no notice can be served and no proceedings can be taken against a dead person.¹ But where the complainant dies, after filing a revision against an order of compensation, the application does not abate but can be prosecuted by his legal representatives.²

19. Appeal — Sub-section (3). — Before the amendment of 1891, no appeal lay against the order for compensation.¹ Sub-s. (3) now provides for an appeal.

Before the amendment of 1923, no appeal lay against an order under this section passed by a first class Magistrate.² Sub-section(3) now provides for such an appeal if the amount awarded exceeds rupees fifty. No appeal lies against the order of a single judge of the High Court in revision from an order under this section.³ An appeal lies when the total amount ordered to be paid exceeds rupees fifty even though the amount to be paid to each of the accused, where there are more than one, does not exceed that sum.⁴ Where an order for compensation is appealed against, the accused should, on the principle of audi alteram partem, receive notice thereof and the Court hearing the appeal would be exercising a proper discretion to give notice to the accused in such cases.⁵ See also S. 422. An appellate Court can go into all the facts of the case, in order to determine whether the case is false and vexatious.⁶ But an appellate Court will not set aside an order for compensation except for very cogent reasons inasmuch as the power to award compensation is discretionary with the Magistrate.⁷ As to whether additional evidence can be recorded by the appellate Court in an appeal under this section, see Note 3 to S. 428.

20. Revision.—The High Court has ample jurisdiction to revise and examine an order under this section, in the exercise of its ordinary revisional powers and under S. 435,¹ though it will not interfere when no prejudice is caused.²

The High Court can also entertain a revision petition in the first instance, though ordinarily it is the practice not to entertain it without its being presented to the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate.³

An accused person after his acquittal is not an accused within S. 439 (2), and hence has no right to be heard in a revision petition against an order for compensation under this section.⁴

OF THE TRIAL OF WARRANT-CASES BY MAGISTRATES.

Section 251

Procedure in warrant-cases. 251. The following procedure shall be observed by Magistrates in the trial of warrant-cases.

1. "Trial," meaning of. — See Notes on section 4 (1) (k).
2. "Warrant-case." — For definition of warrant-case, see section 4 (1) (w).

Where the offence is one triable as a warrant-case, the fact that a summons instead of a warrant was issued under S. 204, does not affect the character of the offence and it cannot be tried as a summons-case.¹ Similarly, where an offence is triable as a warrant-case, the Magistrate cannot split it up into its component parts which constitute minor offences so as to be able to try the case as a summons-case.²

3. Effect of non-compliance with provisions. — It has been held in the undermentioned cases¹ that where a Magistrate tries a warrant-case as a summons-case and acquits the accused, the order of acquittal operates only as an order of discharge under S. 253 and not as an order of acquittal. See also Note 19 to S. 537.

4. Change of procedure subsequent to commencement of trial. — Where the offence charged at the commencement of proceedings against the accused is triable as a warrant-case and the trial is commenced as a warrant-case, it is not open to the Magistrate thereafter to abandon the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant-cases and adopt that of summons-cases on the ground that the accused appears to have committed only an offence triable as a summons-case, when such course is likely to prejudice the accused in his defence.¹ Similarly, a Magistrate who has commenced a trial under this chapter (chapter 21) cannot subsequently change the procedure to one under chapter 22 (summary trials), as such a course would be prejudicial to the interests of the accused.² But where the irregularity has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice it will not invalidate the trial.³

1. Legislative changes.

(1) The Code of 1861 did not contain any express provision entitling the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before the framing of the charge. The Code of 1872 contained such express provisions. (Sections 218, 191, 214.) The express provisions were omitted in the later Codes.

(2) The proviso to sub-s.(1) has been added by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923. [Cf. S. 200 (aa) and S. 244, proviso.]

2. Scope of the section. — This section requires that the trial of a warrant-case must commence with the hearing of the complainant (if any) and the examination of the prosecution witnesses. The Magistrate has no power to forthwith require the accused to state his plea and on his admission of his guilt, convict him without taking any evidence as in a summons-case.¹ (See Ss. 242 and 243.)

This section, like the other sections in this chapter, applies to warrant-cases generally. Hence, it applies to a case started on a police challan.²

3. "Appears or is brought." — This section empowers the Magistrate to proceed with the trial of an accused person whenever he appears or is "brought before a Magistrate." The legality or otherwise of the arrest under which the accused is brought before the Magistrate does not affect the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to try the accused.¹

As to the right of the accused to appear by pleader, see S. 205 and Notes thereunder.

Section 252.
Notes 3-5.

4. "Shall proceed to hear the complainant." — This section only requires that the complainant should be heard. It does not require the examination of the complainant on oath.¹

The Magistrate must proceed to hear the case though the complainant wishes to withdraw his complaint.² The reason is that in warrant-cases the complainant is not entitled to withdraw his complaint. See S. 248 and Notes thereunder.

5. "Take all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution." — This section casts upon the Magistrate the duty of taking all the evidence produced on behalf of the prosecution unless it is irrelevant.¹ But this duty applies only to the evidence which is ready when the case is taken up for hearing and the Magistrate is not bound to go on taking the evidence that may be offered subsequently from time to time.²

Section 252

When a Magistrate, for sufficient reasons, refuses to issue a commission, or to move the District Magistrate for issue of a commission, for the examination of a witness, he cannot be deemed to have refused, or omitted to take the evidence produced in support of the prosecution.³

When witnesses are common to a number of cases before the Court, the evidence in each case should be taken separately. It is not proper to take the depositions in one case and have them copied and used in another case.⁴

As to the right of the prosecution to lead evidence after the accused has entered on his defence, see S. 256 and Notes thereunder.

On general principles the duty of the prosecution is not to work for a conviction, but to see that justice is done and it is bound to produce all witnesses who are acquainted with the facts of the case although they may not favour the prosecution, unless their evidence is unnecessary or there is reasonable ground for believing that they will not speak the truth.⁵ Where a material witness is withheld by the prosecution without any sufficient cause, the Court can draw an inference that his evidence if produced will be against the prosecution. See Evidence Act, S. 114, Illustration (g).⁶ See also Notes under sections 208, 244 and 286.

6. Proviso to sub-section (1). — For cases where the complaint of a Court is necessary for taking cognizance of an offence, see S. 195.

7. "Shall ascertain" — Sub-section (2). — The Magistrate is bound under this section, to ascertain from the complainant or otherwise the names of any persons who are likely to be acquainted with the facts of the case and to be able to give evidence for the prosecution and he may summon to give evidence before himself such of them as he thinks necessary.¹ In discharge of this obligation, the Magistrate must specifically question the complainant as to whether he knows of any witnesses who will have to be summoned. The Magistrate is not bound or expected to exercise this duty of ascertaining more than once, and the proper time for such ascertainment is when the evidence already "produced" in support of the prosecution has been taken.²

The Magistrate is not bound to summon every one of the witnesses named by the complainant: he must only summon such of the witnesses as he thinks necessary.³ But he cannot arbitrarily refuse to summon any witness: he should issue summons to all witnesses named by the complainant, who, he considers, are likely to give useful evidence.⁴ This power of summoning witnesses named by the complainant may be exercised from time to time as the occasion requires.⁵

The section only authorizes the issue of a summons to a witness, and a warrant for his arrest can be issued only if the conditions laid down in S. 90 are satisfied.⁶ See also the undermentioned case.⁷

It is open to a Magistrate, under this sub-section, to take such evidence as he considers necessary in order to find whether an offence has really been committed or not, even if the complainant states that he does not wish to proceed with the complaint.⁸

9. Production and inspection of documents. — Where during the examination of the complainant several documents are produced as evidence against the accused, and are admitted by the Magistrate and marked as exhibits, the accused is entitled to the inspection of all documents filed as exhibits in the case and such inspection should not be refused with the direction that he may apply for and obtain certified copies.¹

10. Cross-examination of witnesses. — This section does not expressly refer to the right of the accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. But on general principles and under S. 183 of the Evidence Act, the liability to cross-examination by the adverse party is part of the conception of legal evidence¹ and under sections, like S. 244, which also do not expressly confer a right of cross-examination, it has been held that such a right undoubtedly exists.² But S. 256 provides that after the charge is framed the accused must be required to state if he desires to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and if he says he wishes to do so, the witnesses named by him should be re-called and he should be allowed to cross-examine them. The question has arisen as to what is the effect of this provision. Does it impliedly negative the right of the accused to cross-examine at an earlier stage, viz., before the charge is framed, or does it confer on the accused an additional right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed? On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras³ and Patna,⁴ the Chief Court of Lower Burma,⁵ the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Upper Burma,⁶ Sind⁷ and Nagpur⁸ that the accused is entitled as of right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed as well as afterwards.

But it has been held by the Allahabad⁹ and Calcutta¹⁰ High Courts that the accused is not entitled as of right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed, but is only entitled to do so afterwards under s.256. At the same time the Allahabad¹¹ and Calcutta¹² High Courts have held that s. 256 does not prohibit cross-examination by the accused before the charge is framed and the Magistrate can, as a matter of discretion, allow, and indeed will be well-advised to allow, the accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The Punjab Chief Court also seems to hold the same view.¹³ The question came up for decision before a Bench of the Oudh Chief Court, but the Judges constituting the Bench differed in their opinion, one of them expressing his concurrence with the Madras and Patna view and the other agreeing with the Allahabad and Calcutta view.¹⁴

An accused is entitled to decline to exercise his right of cross-examination (assuming that it is held that he has such a right).¹⁵

The fact that certain evidence has not been tested by cross-examination does not affect its admissibility but only its probative value.¹⁶

1. Legislative changes.

1. The words "if he finds that no offence has been proved against the accused" which occurred in the corresponding sections of the Codes of 1861 and 1872 have been replaced in the later Codes by the words "if . . . he finds that no case against the accused has been made out which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction."

* Code of 1882 : S. 253 — Same as that of 1898 Code.

Code of 1872 : S. 215 para. 1 and Expl. III.

215. When the evidence of the complainant and of the witnesses for the prosecution and such examination of the accused person as the Magistrate considers necessary, have been taken, the Magistrate, if he finds that no offence has been proved against the accused person, shall discharge him.

Explanation III. — An order of discharge cannot be passed until the evidence of the witnesses named for the prosecution has been taken.

Code of 1861 : S. 250.

250. When the evidence of the complainant and of the witnesses for the prosecution, and such examination of the accused person as the Magistrate shall consider necessary, have been taken, the Magistrate, if he finds that no offence has been proved against the accused person shall discharge him.

2. The Codes of 1861 and 1872 did not contain any provision corresponding to sub-s.(2). On the other hand, Explanation III to S. 215 of the Code of 1872 expressly declared that an order of discharge could not be passed till after the examination of the witnesses named for the prosecution. This provision was removed and the provision contained in sub-s.(2) was introduced in the later Codes thus rendering obsolete the undermentioned decisions¹ under the prior Codes which held that a Magistrate could not discharge an accused before taking all the evidence for the prosecution.

2. "If, upon taking all the evidence referred to in S. 252."

—This section makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to take all the evidence offered on behalf of the prosecution before he discharges the accused¹ unless he finds that the charge against the accused is groundless in which case he can discharge the accused even before he has taken all the prosecution evidence. (See Note 6.) It has been held that the Magistrate can discharge an accused on the basis of the evidence of a witness called at the instance of accused under S. 540, though this section refers only to the evidence for the prosecution.²

3. Examination of accused (if any) as he thinks necessary.

accused before the charge is framed.¹ But such an examination is entirely discretionary with the Magistrate and he is not bound to examine the accused before the charge is framed.²

As to whether the examination of an accused before the charge is framed dispenses with the examination of the accused under S. 342 after the charge is framed and the prosecution evidence is closed and before the accused is called on to enter upon his defence, see S. 342 Note 9.

As to the scope and effect of an examination of the accused in criminal cases, see Notes under S. 342.

4. "The Magistrate shall discharge him." — This section contemplates an order discharging the accused. An order dismissing a complaint is not the proper order to be passed under the section.¹ A formal and express order of discharge is, however, not necessary. It may be implied and presumed from the circumstances of a case.² Thus, where a person is accused of a major offence but the Magistrate frames only a charge for a minor offence, there is an implied discharge in respect of the major offence.³ To determine whether a particular order is one of discharge, the substance of the order and not its form should be taken into consideration. Thus, where no charge has been drawn up and the prisoner has not been asked to make his defence, and the Magistrate finds that no case has been made out against the accused, his order is only one of discharge though he styles it as an order of acquittal.⁴ Similarly, if the defence of the accused is taken and witnesses are examined in support thereof, the order of the

5. Grounds of discharge. — Under sub-s.(1) of this section a Magistrate can discharge an accused when, upon considering the evidence for the prosecution, he comes to the conclusion that no case has been made out against the accused, which, if unrebutted, would warrant his conviction.¹ But where the Magistrate has not come to such a conclusion, he has no power to discharge the accused under this section. Thus, an accused person cannot be discharged under this sub-section merely because a civil suit touching the same dispute is pending between the parties² or the complaint is vague³ or because it is desirable to try the accused along with another co-accused whose attendance before the Court it has not so far been possible to procure.⁴ Similarly, except in cases falling under S. 259, the absence of the complainant at the hearing is no ground for discharging an accused (see Notes under S.259). But in such a case the accused may be discharged for want of evidence against him.⁵ It is not sufficient to enable a Magistrate to discharge an accused person under this section that there can be no conviction for the particular offence which was originally alleged against the accused but only in respect of some other offence⁶ or that the accused appears to have committed the offence only in respect of a smaller sum than that alleged by the prosecution.⁷ Where an accused person escapes into a foreign jurisdiction and the Magistrate holding the enquiry in connexion with the extradition proceedings reports that there is no sufficient ground for extradition, this is not by itself a sufficient ground for the discharge of the accused under this section.⁸ It is the absence of sufficient evidence for conviction that can justify a discharge under this section.

6. Sub-section (2).—Although sub-s.(1) of this section requires the Magistrate to take all the evidence for the prosecution before discharging the accused, sub-s.(2) empowers the Magistrate to discharge the accused at any previous stage of the case if he finds that the charge against the accused is a groundless one.¹ Thus, the accused can be discharged even before any evidence for the prosecution is taken or when such evidence is being taken,² or before the complainant is heard under S. 252,^{2a} or before the date of hearing.³ The Calcutta⁴ and the Patna⁵ High Courts have held that even an order refusing to issue process for the appearance of the accused may amount to an order of discharge though the Madras High Court has expressed the opinion that neither an order of discharge nor one of acquittal can be passed in a case where the accused has not been directed to appear at all.⁶ But an order of discharge can be passed only after the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence. An order refusing to take cognizance of an offence is therefore not an order of discharge.⁷

Under this sub-section, the Magistrate can discharge the accused before he has taken the evidence for the prosecution if he finds that the charge against the accused is groundless. A finding that the charge is groundless is not the same as a finding under sub-s.(1) that no case has been made out against the accused.⁸

7. "For reasons to be recorded." — Sub-S.(2) requires the Magistrate to record his reasons for holding that the charge is groundless. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to when a Magistrate will be justified in holding a charge to be groundless. The Magistrate should arrive at his conclusion judicially and not capriciously. If, acting judicially, a Magistrate has come to the conclusion on grounds to be recorded, that the charge must fail either because the allegations are false or because they disclose a dispute of a civil nature which is distorted into a criminal case or for any other reason, he can discharge the accused without taking the evidence for the prosecution.¹ In arriving at his conclusion the Magistrate can take into account a police-report² or a civil Court's judgment³ touching the dispute. Where the story related by the prosecutor himself is of such a nature that it does not disclose a criminal offence, the Magistrate will be justified in discharging the accused under this sub-section without taking the evidence for the prosecution.⁴

But where the complaint discloses prima facie a case against the accused, the Magistrate cannot discharge the accused unless he knows what is the sort of evidence that is going to be adduced in support of the charge and unless he considers that even if such evidence were taken into consideration the charge would be groundless.⁵

The mere fact that the matter is one of rendition of accounts does not justify a Magistrate in holding a charge of criminal breach of trust to be groundless.⁶ In such a case, the question of trust must be fully inquired into, and for this purpose it is necessary that the whole of the prosecution evidence should be recorded. An order of discharge after examination of some of the prosecution witnesses, on the ground that the case is of a civil nature, is premature.⁷ Similarly, it would not be a proper exercise of the discretion of the Magistrate under this sub-section to discharge an accused merely on a statement of a prosecution witness that the complainant had previously admitted that the case was a false one.⁸

A Magistrate should give his reasons at the time he pronounces the order of discharge, and if it is the final order in the case, he is bound to give his reasons because, the moment he pronounces the final order he becomes functus officio. But where several accused are being tried before him and he discharges some of them without giving any reasons in the order of discharge, it is competent for him to give his reasons in regard to the order of discharge at any time until the charge against the remaining accused is disposed of by a final order.⁹

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 & 1872 and the later Codes —

- (1) The Codes of 1861 (S. 250) and 1872 (S. 216) contained the words "if the Magistrate finds that an offence is apparently proved" against the accused person" instead of the words "if the Magistrate is of the opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence" which occurred in the later Codes.

* 1882 : S. 254; 1872 : S. 216; 1861 : S. 250.

Section 254

(2) The words "triable under this chapter" qualifying the word "offence" did not occur in the Codes of 1861 and 1872 but were inserted in the later Codes.

(3) The Code of 1872, S. 216, contained two explanations the provisions of which have now been transferred to S. 535.

Changes made in 1898 —

The words "or at any previous stage of the case" were first inserted in the Code of 1893.

2. "When such evidence and examination have been taken and made." — The section contemplates that in warrant-cases, the Magistrate should take the evidence for the prosecution before framing a charge. In this respect the procedure is different from that adopted in summons-cases where at the very commencement of the proceedings the particulars of the offence are explained to the accused and he is required to state his plea.¹ This section authorizes the Magistrate to take into consideration the statement of the accused person himself in framing a charge against him. Hence, in a proper case, the Magistrate will be within his powers in framing a charge on the mere statement of the accused himself.²

See also Notes under section 253.

3. "Or at any previous stage." — Under this section the Magistrate is not bound in every case to take the whole of the evidence for the prosecution before framing a charge. He is entitled to frame a charge, even before the evidence for the prosecution has been completely recorded, at any moment he is satisfied that a prima facie case has been made out against the accused.¹ It may be noted in this connexion that the procedure in this respect is different in inquiries before commitment to sessions, in that it is obligatory in such inquiries for the Magistrate in every case to take the entire evidence produced on either side before framing a charge.² See S. 203 and Notes thereunder; see also section 210.

4. "Ground for presuming." — The section does not require the Magistrate to give reasons for holding that there are good grounds for framing a charge.¹ In forming his opinion as to whether there is sufficient ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, it is open to the Magistrate to disbelieve the evidence given by the prosecution witnesses. Merely because the prosecution examines a number of witnesses who depose to the guilt of the accused, it is not obligatory on the Magistrate, if he disbelieves them, to frame a charge.² When the evidence recorded does not lead to a presumption that the accused has committed an offence but merely raises a doubt, the Magistrate should give the benefit of doubt to the accused and discharge him.³ Although the section contemplates the framing of a charge only when a prima facie case has been made out against the accused by the prosecution, it is up to the Magistrate to consider the whole of the evidence and the probabilities of the case at the time of proceeding to judgment and he may acquit an accused against whom he has framed a charge though the accused has failed to adduce any satisfactory evidence to rebut the evidence for the prosecution.⁴ The discretion of the Magistrate in framing a charge under this section should not be lightly interfered with in revision.⁵

5. "Offence triable under this Chapter." — Where a Magistrate commences a case as a warrant-case, he can convict the accused of an offence triable as a summons-case when he finds that only such an offence has been committed.¹ As seen in Note 4 to S. 251, in such a case, it is not open to the Magistrate to abandon the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant-cases and adopt that of summons-cases. It is necessary for the Magistrate to frame a charge even in such cases.² The contrary view taken in the undermentioned cases cannot be supported.³ It has been seen in Notes under S. 241 that in a joint trial of two offences one of which is triable as a warrant-case and the other as a summons-case, the procedure prescribed in respect of the graver charge should be followed in regard to both the offences. Hence, in such a case the charge should be framed even in respect of the offence triable as a summons-case.⁴

The section does not restrict the power of the Magistrate to frame a charge to cases where the offence disclosed on the evidence is the same as the one mentioned in the complaint or police-report on which cognizance was taken. A Magistrate can and ought to frame a charge for the offence made out on the evidence though it may be different from the one alleged in the complaint or police-report provided that the other conditions mentioned in the section are present.⁵

As to the procedure to be followed where the offence disclosed is exclusively triable by a Court of Session or is one which in the opinion of the Magistrate ought to be tried by such Court, see S. 347 and Notes thereunder.

6. "Which, in his opinion could be adequately punished by him." — The section contemplates that a charge should be framed under it only when the offence is one for which, in the opinion of the Magistrate, he can award an adequate punishment. If, in his opinion, he cannot do so, he cannot frame a charge and try the case.¹ In such a case he must follow the procedure laid down in S. 346 or S. 347. It has, however, been held in the undermentioned Burma cases² that the provisions of this section are subject to those of S. 349 and that under that section it is competent to a Magistrate of the second or third class to frame a charge against the accused in a case which he has jurisdiction to try even though at the time of framing the charge he is of the opinion that he cannot award adequate punishment for the offence and intends, if the accused is proved to be guilty, to submit the proceedings under that section to the District or sub-divisional Magistrate to pass sentence.

As to whether this section precludes the Magistrate from committing a case to the Court of Session when he is not of the opinion that he cannot adequately punish the offence, see Notes under S. 347.

7. Magistrate shall frame a charge.— Unlike in summons-cases (see S. 242), in warrant-cases it is obligatory on the Magistrate to draw up a formal charge¹ in every case where he holds that a prima facie case has been made out by the prosecution and the other conditions laid down in the section are fulfilled. The duty is cast on the Magistrate to frame a charge and he must be careful to see that the charge, while it alleges all that is necessary to constitute the offence charged, does not contain any unnecessary allegation. Further, the charge ought not to allege positively anything of which the allegation in a positive form is not justified by the materials before the Court. The prosecution is entitled to insist that the charge be so framed by the Court as not to cast on it any unnecessary burden.² In framing a charge the Magistrate must be solely guided by the offence disclosed on the evidence and should not be influenced by any other considerations.³ As to the consequences of a failure to frame a formal charge, see S. 535 and Notes thereunder.

Where in a joint trial of several accused charged with several offences, the Magistrate after taking the prosecution evidence considers that a prima facie case has been made out against all the accused but is faced with the difficulty that misjoinder of charges would result if charges are framed against all the accused, he can in the exercise of charge and the reading of the same to the accused is concerned. In such an inquiry, therefore, the Magistrate may ask the accused if he pleads guilty.¹

1. Legislative changes. — The words "and explained" were first inserted in S. 217 of the Code of 1872.

3. "Read and explained." — The charge must be read and explained by the Magistrate himself and not by his clerk or Amlah.¹ The accused is entitled to know with certainty and accuracy the charge brought against him.² It should, therefore, be so explained as to make the accused clearly understand the nature of the charge.³

The aggravating circumstances of the offence, if any, must also be made known to the accused.⁴

4. "Shall be asked." — The accused cannot be called upon to plead until a charge is framed upon the evidence recorded and the charge has been read and explained to him.

Where a Magistrate convicts the accused on his own admission without recording evidence and without framing a charge, the conviction is liable to be set aside.¹

5. Plea of guilty, what is. — A plea of guilty is an admission of all the facts on which the charge is founded, as well as an admission of guilt in respect of them.¹ A plea of guilty in a Criminal Court can only be made in response to a charge and an informal admission as to guilt does not amount to a formal plea of guilty and such an admission has not in fact or law, the same binding effect as a plea of guilty.²

6. Plea of guilty — Value to be attached to. — A plea of guilty, no less than a confession, must be received with caution.¹ Where the accused belongs to a class of people ignorant of the most elementary principles of law, it is extremely dangerous to admit a plea of guilty without the closest scrutiny of the meaning of the acknowledgment.²

7. Admission by pleader. — A plea of guilty must ordinarily be made by the accused himself and not by his pleader¹ except where the accused is permitted under S. 205 to appear by his pleader.² See also S. 271 Note 10 and S. 340 Note 9.

and consequently where the accused pleads not guilty and in the course of the argument his pleader advances the plea of self-defence, it is the duty of the Court to admit the plea and say upon the facts of the case what offence, if any, has been committed.³ In the undermentioned case⁴ it was held that, though the Court could not at the trial convict an accused merely upon the admission of his pleader, yet, in an appeal, the Appellate Court could act upon an admission of fact made in the appeal by his pleader, especially where it does not cause prejudice to the accused.

8. Plea of guilty by one of several co-accused — Effect of such admission. — A plea of guilty by one of several co-accused may be taken into consideration against the other accused only where the latter are “tried jointly” with the former within the meaning of section 30 of the Evidence Act. In a warrant-case, it is only after the prosecution evidence is over that a charge is framed and the accused pleads guilty. In such a case, all the accused may be said to be tried jointly and the plea of one accused may be considered against the others also.¹ The case is, however, different in the sessions trial where the accused’s plea of guilty is recorded at the outset of the trial. A prisoner who then pleads guilty and is convicted on his plea cannot be held to be “tried jointly” with the others against whom the case proceeds under S. 272.² Where some of the accused jointly tried plead guilty and are convicted and sentenced on their plea, they can be examined as witnesses against the other accused and it is not for the latter to object that the plea of guilty of the former should not have been accepted.³

See also section 271 Note 15.

9. Shall be recorded. — The proceedings must show that the plea of the accused has been recorded. A conviction based upon a plea not so recorded is bad.¹

A plea of guilty must be so recorded as to avoid any misapprehension or mistake. As far as possible the very words used by the accused must be employed. Where there is an exculpatory statement before the charge, the exact words of a plea of guilty should be recorded by question and answer.² The whole and not part of the prisoner’s statement accompanying the plea should be recorded.³ Where the plea of the accused is interpreted to the Court, the language in which the plea should be recorded is the language in which it is conveyed to the Court by the interpreter.⁴

Section 255.
Notes 9-11

10. "May in his discretion convict." — Under this section, the Magistrate may convict the accused on his plea of guilty without calling upon him to enter upon his defence. But he is not bound to do so.¹ In an ordinary criminal case, however, (to which possibly a charge of murder is the only exception) the Court should, as a general rule, accept the plea of guilty and act upon it. It would be a waste of public time to hold an elaborate inquiry in such cases.² But the plea of guilty must be clear and unambiguous and embrace all the elements of the offence charged. Where the accused admits some or all the facts alleged by the prosecution but pleads 'not guilty,' the proper course for the Court is to proceed with the trial.³

Where the offence is not proved upon the evidence, the accused cannot be convicted, even though he does not deny the offence.⁴

11. Effect of non-compliance with the section. — The record must show that the procedure laid down in the section was followed. Where the record does not show that the charge was read and explained to the prisoner¹ or that the accused was asked to plead,² the conviction is liable to be set aside on the ground of prejudice to the accused.

255A. In a case where a previous conviction is charged under the provisions of section 221, sub-section (7), and the accused does not admit that he has been previously convicted as alleged in the charge, the Magistrate may, after he has convicted the said accused under section 255, sub-section (2), or section 258, take evidence in respect of the alleged previous conviction, and shall record a finding thereon.

Section 255A
Notes 1-4

1. Scope of the section. — This section is new and was introduced into the Code by the Code of Criminal Procedure (Amendment) Act, XVIII of 1923. It provides that evidence of a previous conviction for the purpose of affecting the punishment to be awarded can be taken only after the Magistrate has convicted the accused.¹ It gives effect to the undermentioned decisions² which held that it was illegal to take such evidence before the conviction. The undermentioned decision³ which took a contrary view is now obsolete.

2. Admission of previous conviction by accused. — The mere admission by the accused that he had been in jail once, is not sufficient to show that he pleaded guilty to a previous conviction for an offence rendering him liable to enhanced punishment.¹

3. May, after conviction. — See Note 1.

4. Evidence of previous conviction. — Whenever it is required to prove a previous conviction against an accused for the purpose of enhancement of punishment, such previous conviction must be proved strictly and in accordance with law.¹ The accused must also be called upon to plead to the charge of previous conviction.² See also Ss. 311 and 511 and Notes thereunder.

Code of 1872 : S. 218.

218. If the accused person have any defence to make to the charge he shall be called upon to enter upon the same and to produce his witnesses
Defence. if in attendance, and shall be allowed to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution.

If the accused person puts in any written statement, the Magistrate may file it with the record, but shall not be bound to do so.

Code of 1861 : S. 252—Same as the first para. only of S. 218 of 1872 Code.

Notes 1-2

1. Legislative changes.

Difference between the Codes of 1861 and 1872 —

In 1872 a sub-clause was added by which the accused's written statement, if any, might be received and filed with the record.

Differences between the Codes of 1872 and 1882 —

- (1) Instead of the clause "if the accused person to enter upon the same" the clause "if the accused refuses to plead to enter upon his defence" was inserted. The decision bearing on the interpretation of the former expression¹ is only of academic interest now.
- (2) For the words "to produce his witnesses if in attendance"² the words "to produce his evidence" were substituted in 1882.
- (3) The clause "and shall, at any time while he is making his defence, be allowed to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution, present in Court or its precincts" was substituted for the clause "and shall be allowed to recall and cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution" occurring in the Code of 1872.
- (4) In the clause regarding the filing of the written statement of the accused the word "shall" was substituted for the word "may" and the words "but shall not be bound to do so" were omitted.

Differences between the Codes of 1882 and 1898 —

In the 1898 Code after the words "if the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried" the words "he shall be required to state they shall also be discharged" were added. At the same time, the provision in the Code of 1882 by which the accused was given the right to "recall and cross-examine prosecution witnesses at any time while making his defence" was repealed and it was provided that the accused should be called upon to enter upon his defence after the examination, cross-examination, and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses.

Changes made by Act XVIII of 1923 —

After the words "he shall be required to state" the words "at the commencement of the next hearing of the case forthwith" were added thereby requiring the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wished to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses already examined, not on the day on which a charge is framed, but at the next hearing only, unless for reasons to be recorded in writing the Magistrate thinks fit to put the question on the same day as he frames the charge.

2. Scope and applicability of the section. — Section 255 provides that when the accused pleads guilty in a warrant-case the Magistrate may convict him upon such plea. This section provides for the procedure to be followed when the accused does not plead guilty. It provides inter alia that the accused should be asked to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken and if he so wishes, the witnesses named by him should be recalled and he should be allowed to cross-examine them. It has been seen in the Notes under S. 252 that in warrant-cases the accused can be allowed to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses even before the charge is framed. The present section confers on the accused an opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed. The reason for this provision is that in warrant-cases the accused is in a position to know the exact case he has to meet only after the charge is framed.¹ As to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed, see Notes under S. 252.

A second opportunity to cross-examine prosecution witnesses is vouchsafed to the accused only in warrant-cases. The accused has no such right in summons cases. But where a case is commenced as a warrant-case but subsequently it appears that only an offence triable as a summons-case has been committed, it is not open to the Magistrate to suddenly revert to the procedure of summons-cases and he is bound to allow the accused further opportunity of cross-examining the prosecution witnesses if he desires for it.² (See Notes under S. 251.) Similarly, as has been seen in the Notes under S. 241, where a summons-case and a warrant-case are tried together, the procedure prescribed for warrant-cases should be followed. In such a case also if the Magistrate finds that the charge in respect of the warrant-case is unsustainable and decides to proceed with the other offence alone, it is not open to him to deny to the accused the opportunity of further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses provided for by this section.³

Section 262 provides that in warrant-cases tried summarily the procedure prescribed for the trial of warrant-cases should be followed. Section 263 provides that in summary trials, in cases in which no appeal lies, a formal charge need not be drawn up. The question has arisen whether this section (S. 256) applies to warrant-cases tried summarily in which a charge is not framed. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand it has been held by the High

Courts of Calcutta,⁴ Madras,⁵ Nagpur⁶ and Patna⁷ and the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Sind⁸ relying on the general provisions of S. 262, that the section applies to such cases notwithstanding the absence of a formal charge. But, on the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay⁹ and the Chief Court of Oudh¹⁰ that the section does not apply to such cases as it only contemplates cases where a charge is framed.

As a general rule, the cross-examination of a witness should be made immediately after his examination-in-chief is over and the cross-examination cannot be reserved till the other witnesses have been examined unless the Court, in its discretion, permits the cross-examination to be reserved. This section provides an exception to this general rule because it entitles an accused person in a warrant-case to defer the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses till the witnesses have been examined-in-chief and a charge is framed.¹¹

The section applies not only to cases where the charge is framed before the prosecution has completed its evidence, but also to cases where the charge is framed after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined-in-chief.¹²

As to the applicability of the section to proceedings under S. 145, see Notes under that section.

As to whether the accused is entitled to cross-examine prosecution witnesses a second time after the charge is framed in preliminary inquiries before commitment to sessions, see S. 213 Note 7.

3. "Refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried." — If the accused "refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried," the procedure laid down in this section should be followed. The expression "claims to be tried" includes cases where the accused pleads not guilty. Where the accused denies the charge and pleads not guilty, he is entitled to be dealt with under this section although he may admit all or any of the allegations of the prosecution.¹ The procedure provided in the section should be followed not only when the accused pleads not guilty or claims to be tried but also where he refuses to plead at all or does not plead.² The effect of this provision is that an accused is not bound to answer at all any question put to him and can, if he likes, decline to plead. Hence, by declining to plead he does not commit any offence under S. 179 of the Penal Code.³

Does the expression "claims to be tried" in this section show that in warrant-cases the "trial" does not begin till the charge is framed and the accused claims to be tried? For a discussion on this question, see Notes under S. 4 (1) (k).

4. The accused shall be required to state. — This provision, requiring the Magistrate to ask the accused if he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses examined before charge, was introduced for the first time in the Code of 1893. In two old decisions, one of the High Court of Calcutta decided in the year 1876¹ and the other of the High Court of Allahabad decided in 1874,² it was laid down that the Magistrate before discharging the prosecution witnesses should ask the accused if he required them for his further cross-examination. That was suggested only as a rule of convenience. Now, the Magistrate is bound to question the accused on that point; it has been made a statutory duty on the part of the Magistrate. It is of vital importance that the accused should in all cases be asked at the appropriate time if he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.³ But as to whether such an omission is a material irregularity or not, see Note 20 to section 537.

The Code does not explicitly require the Magistrate to record the fact that he has observed the provisions of this section. But it is a safe and sound rule that when the law requires anything to be done, the fact that this has been done should be recorded.⁴ Hence, it is important that the record must show that the Magistrate has complied with the provisions of the section by questioning the accused in the manner laid down therein.⁵

Section 256.
Notes 3-4

Section 256

5. "At the commencement of the next hearing" — There was no provision in the section as it stood originally in the Code of 1898 as to the particular time at which the accused was to be asked to state whether he wishes to cross-examine any and, if so, which of the prosecution witnesses.¹ Under these circumstances, it was held in the undermentioned case^{1a} that the re-cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses must be made immediately after the charge was framed. Under the section as amended in 1923, it has been provided that the accused should be required to state at the next hearing whether he wished to cross-examine any witnesses unless the Magistrate, for reasons to be recorded by him, thinks fit to require him to do so immediately. The object of the provision is to give the accused sufficient time to consider whether he should cross-examine the prosecution witnesses.²

A Magistrate can adjourn the case to a later date solely for the purpose of asking the accused whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses; and, if he does so, it cannot be said that the proceedings on the adjourned date are not a 'hearing' merely because no other action is to be taken on that date.^{2a}

If the Magistrate requires the accused to state, on the same date on which the charge is framed, whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses, he should record his reasons for doing so.³ But it is not so much the recording of reasons as the adequacy thereof which should count in the determination of the question whether the provisions of the section have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming, the mere fact that they have been recorded by the Magistrate in writing will not save the trial from the taint of irregularity. As a general rule, sufficient time must be allowed to the accused to consider and decide whether he should cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he wishes to do so.⁴

Section 256.

Good, adequate and cogent reasons should be given for requiring the accused to state his intention on the same day.⁵ That it is the usual practice of the Magistrate to ask the accused to state his intention on the same day is not a sufficient reason.⁶ That the Magistrate had to go out for urgent work or that the prosecution witnesses had to leave the place of trial immediately is not a good reason for requiring the accused to state forthwith if he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses.⁷ But the fact that the prosecution witnesses come from a Native State and it would take a long time to secure their attendance again was held to be a sufficient reason.⁸ The convenience of the Magistrate and the witnesses alone should not be considered. In a Madras case,⁹ where the Magistrate required the accused to state his intention on the same day and recorded the reason "the accused is undefended," Pandalai, J., held that the reason was good and sufficient, and observed that the Magistrate might have considered that as the accused had not engaged a pleader, nor appeared desirous of doing so, it would simply be a waste of time to defer the question till the next hearing. But it is submitted that this reasoning is not sound as the fact that the accused is not represented by a lawyer is rather a reason for allowing him time for considering whether he should cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses than for denying him such time.¹⁰

It has been held in the undermentioned case¹¹ that it would make no difference to the accused if the question is put to him on the date when the charge is framed and not on the next date when the witnesses for the prosecution are present and are in fact cross-examined.

As to the consequence of the failure to record reasons, see Note 20 to section 537.

Though under this section the accused is entitled to an adjournment to decide what witnesses, if any, he should cross-examine, it is open to his counsel to waive the right to such adjournment and where he does so, the failure to adjourn the case cannot be objected to later on.¹²

6. Right of accused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. — In warrant-cases an accused has three opportunities to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses : (a) before the charge is framed under S. 252, (b) after charge under this section and (c) after the accused enters on his defence under S. 257.¹

As regards (a) it has been seen in the Notes under S. 252 that there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the accused is entitled as of right to cross-examine prosecution witnesses before the charge is framed. See Notes under S. 252.

But as regards the right of cross-examination granted under this section, it is an absolute right and the Magistrate has no power to disallow such cross-examination.² The accused is not bound to show that he has reasonable grounds for exercising his right under the section.^{2a} The fact that the witnesses have been already cross-examined by him before the charge does not deprive him of his right to cross-examine them again under this section.³ It has been held that even if the previous cross-examination was on the distinct understanding that the accused would not require the witnesses to be re-called for further cross-examination after the charge, he cannot be deprived of his rights under this section if he wishes to exercise them.⁴ If there are more than one accused, each of them should be given an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses.⁵ The accused should be given a full and reasonable opportunity to exercise his right under the section and he should be allowed sufficient time to engage a pleader to cross-examine the witnesses.^{5a}

This section does not prescribe the order in which the accused should cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. In these circumstances, under s. 135, Evidence Act, the matter is left to the discretion of the Magistrate and in a proper case he may allow the accused to cross-examine the witnesses in any order he chooses.⁶

Where a witness for the prosecution is examined on commission under the provisions of chapter XL of this Code, it is open to an accused person to refrain from putting in any interrogatories when the commission is first issued, and to apply, after the charge has been framed against him, for re-issue of the commission together with his cross-interrogatories for the purpose of the cross-examination of the witness.^{6a}

As to the point of time up to which the accused can exercise his right to have prosecution witnesses re-called for cross-examination under this section, see Note 7.

Below are given some decisions bearing on the extent to which cross-examination may be allowed.⁷

7. Waiver of the right under this section.— Under the Codes of 1872 and 1861, there was a conflict of decisions as to whether the right to cross-examine was exercisable at any time. One set of cases¹ holding that the accused could claim the right at any time before the trial closed or after the close of the examination of his own witnesses, unless he had previously expressly abandoned it, and another set of cases² holding that the right should be exercised at the time when the charge framed was read and explained to the accused and that, if not exercised at that time, it could not afterwards be insisted on, though the Magistrate had a discretion to permit such cross-examination. But the Code of 1882 specifically laid down that the accused “shall, at any time while he is making his defence, be allowed to re-call and cross-examine any witness for the prosecution”

The present section has altered this procedure. It makes it quite clear that the accused is not entitled after he has entered upon his defence to insist upon re-calling and cross-examining any of the prosecution witnesses examined before the charge.³ If he does not exercise his right at the proper time and begins to adduce his own evidence, he will be deemed to have waived his right and cannot thereafter claim to exercise it.⁴ But as the right accrues only after the charge is framed, it cannot be deemed to be waived by a statement by the accused or his pleader before the charge that he would not require

8. Recall and discharge of the witnesses. — Under the Code of 1882, the accused was given the right to re-call and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses "present in Court or its precincts."¹ But these words have been deleted in the Code of 1898. The question has arisen under this Code whether the right of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses examined before the charge conferred by this section applies only to witnesses who have not been discharged or applies also to witnesses who have been discharged. On this question there is a conflict of decisions. On the one hand, it has been held by the High Courts of Madras² and Allahabad³ that this section applies only to cases where the prosecution witnesses required for cross-examination have not been discharged and that where they have been discharged, the accused is not entitled to have them re-summoned under this section but they can only be re-summoned in the discretion of the Magistrate under S. 257. But, on the other hand, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court⁴ that the right of the accused under this section applies also to prosecution witnesses who have been discharged. It is submitted that the Calcutta view seems to be the better view as it is more consistent with the repeal of the words "present in Court or its precincts" which occurred in the previous Code as there is no reason to restrict the meaning of the word "recalled" so as to exclude the sense of "re-summoning" as suggested by the Allahabad and Madras rulings cited above. See also the undermentioned case.⁵

9. Examination of the remaining witnesses. — The words "remaining witnesses" do not necessarily refer only to those witnesses who have been named by the complainant as required by S. 252, sub-s.(2) and summoned by the Magistrate before the framing of the charge;

these words include any witness who according to the prosecution is able to support its case, though he has not been summoned.¹ But the High Court of Allahabad has taken a contrary view in the undermentioned case.² The mere fact that certain witnesses are not present in Court does not prevent them from being included in the words "remaining witnesses" within the meaning of this section. But the prosecution is not entitled to get an adjournment of the case as of right in order to secure the attendance of such witnesses.³

9a. Production of documents by prosecution during cross-examination of prosecution witnesses. — This section as well as S. 252 does not prohibit the admission of relevant and admissible evidence at any stage of the trial. Hence, it is not illegal for a Magistrate to allow documents to be produced by the prosecution while the prosecution witnesses are being cross-examined by the accused.¹

10. The accused shall then be called upon to enter on his defence and produce his evidence. — The accused can be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence only after the charge has been framed, his plea asked for and after the examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses including the re-cross-examination of such of them as were examined before the charge.¹ After the accused enters on his defence, no

Note 10

The section only requires the Magistrate to call upon the accused to enter upon his defence and to produce his evidence; it does not require him to ask the accused if he means to call witnesses or not.³ It is a right of the accused to be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence and an omission to ask him to do so is a flaw in the trial.⁴ The Magistrate should give every reasonable opportunity to the accused to produce his evidence.⁵ See also Note 27 to S. 537. The nature of the defence is to be gathered not only from the statement of the accused himself but also from the trend of the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and from the arguments of the accused's pleader at the close of the trial.⁶

But the accused is not bound to produce any evidence in his defence merely because a charge has been framed against him; and he cannot be convicted on the mere ground that he has failed to produce any evidence.⁷ Similarly, where the prosecution has not established a prima facie case against the accused, the failure of the accused to produce any evidence in his defence cannot give rise to any adverse inference against him.⁸ But where the evidence for the prosecution established a prima facie case against the accused, the fact that he has not produced any evidence of rebuttal enhances the weight of the prosecution evidence.⁹

Where defence evidence is rejected by the Court, the situation simply is as if the evidence had never existed. If the defence evidence is believed, it would rebut the prosecution. But, if it is not believed, the prosecution is left just where it was before the defence witnesses were called.¹⁰

The accused is entitled to raise any defence technical or otherwise and the Court is bound to pronounce judgment on it.¹¹ An accused can raise inconsistent defences in the alternative and such defences, though they make the accused's case weaker,¹² cannot be disallowed by the Court.¹³ The burden of proving the guilt of the accused is on the prosecution and it cannot succeed merely because of the weakness¹⁴ or falseness¹⁵ of the case for the defence.

Though the onus of proving that the case of the accused falls within one of the general exceptions in the Penal Code is on him, it is not necessary that he should specifically raise such plea. Thus, a Court is bound to consider the plea of private defence as appearing from the prosecution evidence even though it is not specifically pleaded by the accused.¹⁶

The right of the accused to produce evidence in his defence under this section is one that can be waived and if the accused when asked to produce his evidence has said that he has no witnesses to examine, he will not afterwards be entitled to let in any evidence.¹⁷

like a pleading in a civil suit and does not preclude the raising of any defence not mentioned in the written statement.⁵

It has been held by the Madras High Court⁶ that the right to file a written statement under this section carries with it the right to file any documents to which the accused was a party and that as the accused cannot give evidence on oath the Court is bound to consider such documents, though not proved in the regular way.

The section does not specify the point of time at which the written statement is to be filed under this section. It has been said that the written statement is to be filed at the time of recording the accused's plea to the charge.⁷

There is a conflict of decisions as to whether the filing of a written statement by the accused under this section dispenses with his oral examination after the close of the prosecution evidence, under S. 342. (See Note 18 under S. 342.) But the fact that a written statement has been filed may be taken into consideration in determining whether the accused was prejudiced by the failure to comply with the provisions of section 342.⁸

It has been held in the undermentioned case⁹ that a written statement put in by the accused under this section can be used to fill up gaps in the prosecution case.

This section does not apply to disciplinary proceedings against legal practitioners under the Letters Patent and the legal practitioner is not entitled to file any written statement in such proceedings.¹⁰

Note 1

Provided that, when the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court.

1. Scope and applicability of the section. — In criminal cases the prosecution must succeed on its own merits and an accused cannot be convicted merely by reason of his failure to produce any evidence in his defence.¹ But, where the prosecution has established a prima facie case against the accused, he is liable to be convicted unless he rebuts the presumption raised by the prosecution evidence.² He is entitled to a sufficient opportunity to defend himself and to prove his innocence.³ The Court is bound to take the evidence which he offers in his defence,⁴ subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act. He is further entitled to call upon the Court to assist him in the production of evidence material for his defence. This section deals with the last mentioned right of the accused in warrant-cases and lays down under what circumstances he is entitled to apply to the Court for process to compel the production of evidence on his behalf. The section applies also to warrant-cases tried summarily.⁵ It has been held that the principle of the section applies to summons-cases.⁶

If the process first issued fails, the accused is entitled to call upon the Court to issue further processes to compel the attendance of the witness.⁵ But in exceptional cases the Magistrate can re-consider his decision to issue process and may refuse to compel the attendance of a witness if he finds that the application for process against him is made for purpose of vexation or delay.⁶ A Court should not order the accused to pay adjournment costs on the absence of a witness summoned on his behalf.⁷ See also the undermentioned case.⁸

Under this section the accused is entitled to compel the appearance, as a witness, even of the trying Magistrate himself and to enable the accused to do so, the case should be transferred to some other Court if he applies for such transfer.⁹

Where an application is made under this section for summoning witnesses, the Magistrate must deal with the application and pass an order either granting or refusing it; merely keeping it on the file is not proper.¹¹

The Magistrate can refuse to issue process at his instance if he considers that the application for process has been made for the purpose of *vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice.*¹ But the

Magistrate must consider the case of each witness individually before deciding that the application with reference to him has been made for any of the purposes specified in the section.² Further, the section requires that the Magistrate must record his reasons for refusing to issue process in compliance with the accused's application.³ But it has been held that the Magistrate's order need not expressly state that the application for process has been made for the purpose of vexation or delay and that it is sufficient if it states facts which lead to the conclusion that the application has been made for such a purpose.⁴

An application for process under this section can be refused only on the ground of its having been made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The mere fact that the Magistrate thinks that the evidence of the proposed witness will not be material is not sufficient for refusing the application for process.⁵ Nor can the Magistrate take upon himself the responsibility of selecting the witnesses for the defence.⁶ His duty is to issue process for the attendance of all the witnesses named by the accused unless the application for process is vitiated for the reasons mentioned in the section. But where an unduly large number of witnesses are asked to be summoned, it is open to the Magistrate to conclude, in the circumstances of a case, that the application for process is made for purposes of delay.⁷ But where in spite of the largeness of the number of witnesses asked to be summoned, the Magistrate does not think that the application for process is made for the purpose of delay or vexation, he has no option but to accede to the prayer for process.⁸ Nor can he, in such a case, arbitrarily restrict the number of witnesses to be summoned.⁹

The mere fact that an application for process is made at a late stage of the proceeding is not by itself a ground for refusing it.¹⁰ But an unduly belated application for process is liable to be construed as made for the purpose of delay or vexation.¹¹

Where an application for process is first made in respect of some witnesses and then in respect of others, that by itself is no ground for holding that the latter application is made for the purpose of delay or vexation.¹²

Where a Magistrate summons a number of witnesses under this section, he must be presumed to have concluded that their production has not been sought for vexation or delay and the Magistrate cannot thereafter arbitrarily limit the number of witnesses to be examined.^{12a}

5. Production of documentary evidence by accused. — An accused is entitled to produce documentary as well as oral evidence in his defence. The Magistrate should inspect the documents offered by the accused before excluding them.¹ This section also entitles the accused to apply for process to compel the production of documentary evidence in his favour. Before issuing process, the Magistrate should satisfy himself that the documents called for have some bearing on the issues in the case and are relevant.² See also the undermentioned cases.³

This section does not control the provisions of S. 94. Therefore, even before the case has reached the stage indicated by this section, it is open to the Magistrate to summon the production of a document at the instance of the accused if the conditions laid down in S. 94 are satisfied.⁴ See S. 94 Note 2.

Under S. 139 of the Evidence Act a person merely summoned to produce a document does not become a witness and cannot be cross-examined unless and until he is called as a witness.⁵

6. Right of accused to cross-examine prosecution witnesses. — It has been seen in the Notes under S. 253 that an accused in warrant-cases has three opportunities to cross-examine prosecution witnesses: (a) before the charge is framed; (b) after the charge is framed and before the accused is called upon to enter upon his defence and (c) under this section, after the accused has entered upon his defence. Hence, subject to the restrictions contained in this section, an accused is entitled, even after he has entered upon his defence, to have re-summoned for cross-examination any prosecution witness that he may name.¹ The distinction between the right of the accused
